looking house such as some drunken geni might have built at Aladdin's behest. Buildings to the northeast and west of us in our subdivision where building resrictions are quite strict, appeared as usual in the gray light of a late dawn but to the south where the buildings were frame and of all sizes and shapes, the houses all looked queer. They were twisted at all angles and some had disappeared.

FIRST REFUGEES

Shortly after Frank left, while I was trying to see more land marks in the increasing light I saw a line of people coming toward the house. They would come a few steps and then one would stumble and the whole line would go down flat. It would rise again only to repeat the performance. Still stupidly blind to the real horror of things, I wondered why anyone would be out on such a day. Then I saw they were making toward our house. I saw then it was a man and woman, two children and a babe in arms. I went to the door on the porch which opened out to have it open for them. With feet well braced it seemed I couldn't hold it while the
