Filmland Sad in Death of Susan Peters

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—No event in recent months has saddened Hollywood as much as the death of Susan Peters last Friday. The movie people had their memories of the brilliant young actress who flashed on the screens during the war years. She appeared opposite Robert Taylor in "Song of Russia" and critics hailed her as a bright new dramatic star.

I first met her in 1945 when she was recovering from the hunting accident wound that paralyzed her from the waist down. She was living in a small Beverly Hills apartment with her husband, Richard Quine.

Susan still had her Irish beauty and spunk. She told proudly of how she had a temperature of 106 after the accident and the doctors gave up hope for her. But she had been able to murmur to her husband, "I just wanted you to know that I'm not going to die."

In her first interview after the accident, she reported she had taken three steps in her new braces. "I ought to be walking pretty well in three months," she enthused.

Would she act again? "Just let them try and stop me," she said.

She never was able to walk, but she did act again. Her first job was three months later, on a radio drama with Van Johnson. She came through with flying colors.

Christmas of 1946 was a joyous one. She and Dick adopted a baby boy, Timmy. The doctors said she might be able to act in a movie.

The picture was "Sign of the Ram" and she played a mean woman in it. "Sign of the Ram" was not a success, and it was Susan's last picture. After that, her marriage to Quine cracked up. Their friends reported that it was entirely her doing. His loyalty remained steadfast, they said, but she did not want to tie his life to a cripple.

Afterwards, Susan made her life alone. She wanted to be independent and worked herself to the limit of her frail health. She toured all over the country in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" and "The Glass Menagerie."

When I saw her for the last time, she proudly brought out her rave reviews.

For the first time, she made no claim that she would walk again. "How can I—I have no spinal cord," she said. "It will take longer than I live for the doctors to discover how to fix that."

She was running out of hope, and she came to the end of it last week.

"She wouldn't allow anyone to help her recently," said the doctor after she died. "I believe she lost interest in living."

BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mr. Champion Shows Us How to 'Play It Safe'

Mr. Muzzy was watching this hand and he didn't seem to like anything about it. First he shook his head sadly over Mr. Dale's one-diamond response. "Too weak," he muttered to himself. Mr. Muzzy would have bid one no-trump.

wrong, as usual. The response of one in a suit does not promise anything more in high cards than does a one no-trump response. If anything, even a little less. When Mr. Dale bid one diamond, Mr. Champion had no justification to count on him for more than a king and a queen or the equivalent.

Therefore, over the two no-trump bid, Mr. Dale had additional values. Not much, but enough to go on to game.

Mrs. Keen opened the jack of spades, Mr. Abel played his lone king—and Mr. Champion let it hold. Mr. Muzzy, who had moved around to watch the play, made a terrible face that plainly said, "How crazy can you get?" Undoubtedly he was thinking about the old saw that aces were made to kill kings.

Naturally, Mr. Champion had made a fine play. Not that he knew the king was a singleton. But he had cased the hand and seen that he had to knock out the ace and king of diamonds before he could rack up nine tricks.

If Mr. Abel had a spade to return, then Mrs. Keen could not possibly have more than four spades unless the deck were faulty. And in that case, two spade losers and two diamond losers would not defeat him.

What if Mr. Champion won the first trick and later found that the king was a singleton and Mrs. Keen held both the high diamond honors? In that case, he would be surely set. But that was the situation he was protecting against when he ducked at trick one.

Note that this safety play lost nothing. Mr. Champion could win two spade tricks—no more, no less. He wasn't giving up a trick by letting the king win. He was merely deferring taking his spade winners until the second and third rounds of the suit. In other words his safety play had everything to win and nothing at all to lose.

Reverend H. O. Olson of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, conducted services in Grenville Court Chapel.

Funeral services were: Harold Heland, Harry Menzies, Olaf Stagnavik, Olaf Skog, Peter Wold and Erling Wieg.

Mr. Larsen had fished out of Prince Rupert and Vancouver for 40 years. He came to this country from Denmark.

Besides his widow, he is survived by two daughters, Mrs. A. E. (Ted) Smith and Louise, both of Prince Rupert.

Mr. MacKenna and Mr. Forsyth of the Burns Lake School Board attended the annual school meeting in the school here on Monday evening. There was a good attendance, and many matters were discussed. Mr. Antilla was chosen to represent the Francois Lake school for the coming year.

The Women's and Farmers' Institutes sponsored a delightful evening's entertainment last Saturday evening in the Hall. It was in the form of a Halloween party, and the youngsters were dressed in weird and intriguing costumes. It was impossible to recognize the children under their disguises as witches, black cats, gnomes and other outlandish small people.

Costumes were made by the children and their parents. It was very difficult to judge the best, who had a prize each. Old and young joined together in games. After some dancing, lunch was served at midnight. A huge iced cake was raffled, and won by Neil Kelly.

Capt. E. Williams of Kelowna will be in charge of the second shift of the ferry until freeze-up.
