INSPECTION OF REGIMENT WAS FINE SHOWING

General Ross Complimented Local Unit on Attendance and Hints at Improvements

The annual inspection of the First Northern B.C. Regiment, Colonel Nicholls commanding, took place last evening at 8.30 by General J. M. Ross and the books of the regiment were checked up by Major Edwards. Approximately ninety officers and men were out on parade, the biggest turnout in the history of the regiment. The limited quarters at the Armory was crowded to capacity and the regimental band was in full strength. Major Edwards commented on the striking improvement in the band since his last visit.

After the general had inspected the unit on parade, the men were put through drill movements and then the officers and N.C.O.'s were examined orally by the general, who expressed himself as much gratified with the splendid turnout and expressed approval at the progress made since last year.

The General while here mentioned to the commanding officer several developments which may occur during the coming year for the benefit of the regiment.

LABOR COUNCIL BUSY SESSION

Supports Increased Grant to Library and Opposes Cut in Labor Wages

Several important matters were dealt with last evening by the Trades and Labor Council. It was decided to act on a suggestion from President Tom Moore and organize the laundry workers in this city.

It was decided to investigate further an appeal for aid from the Labor Defense League to help the Drumheller miners in their struggle. The executive was given power to act.

The election of officers was deferred for a month.

Honorary membership was conferred on T. J. Shenton, mining inspector, past president of the Trades and Labor Council at Nanaimo for his excellent work in the cause of labor.

It was decided to write a letter to Hon. T. D. Pattullo, member for Prince Rupert, asking for his co-operation in making the Salt Lakes into a picnic grounds. The Labor organization would be prepared to take a part in a movement to improve the grounds across the harbor.

James Black made a report on the work of the library and asked the co-operation of the labor men in helping to secure support for the library. This it was promised would be given.

The council went on record as opposed to $3.50 a day being paid to old men in the employ of the city. It was suggested that by better organization of the work, light positions could be found for these men and they were opposed to two wage scales.

Alderman Larsen addressed the gathering on labor matters.

SALLY OF THE SAWDUST FULL OF JOYFUL GAIETY

Picture to be Shown Here Today and Tomorrow has to do With Joys and Sorrows of Circus Lofe

Ranked by national critics as one of the best pictures of the year, D. W. Griffith's newest production, "Sally of the Sawdust" is the first motion picture to receive this distinction where the critics have seen it in an unfinished condition.

The charm of circus life and carnival merriment for the background is illuminated with the joyful gaiety of two characters new to the screen, a side-show entertainer, juggler and handyman with other people's pockets; and his ward who believes she is his daughter and who loves and fights for him.

The comedian's part is played by W. C. Fields, for years famous laughmaker for the stage and now star of the Ziegfeld "Follies." The daughter's part is played by Carol Dempster, the young California girl who has made such sensational advances in her screen work in the last year. The part of Sally McGargle, the winsome, impulsive waif of the circus, who idolizes her "Pop," and accepts his greatest rogueries as the perfection of "a noble, honorable gentleman," is the best work of her career and one of the memorable triumphs of screen acting.

The scenes are lavishly staged, varying from circus activities to the social splendors of beautiful homes. And as typical of Griffith's work, the action grows to a sensational finish, including one of the most hilarious scenes screened in which the irrepressible McGargle drives his car across country in an effort to get to the courthouse to save Sally from disgrace.
