REVOLUTION IN BRITAIN IS STILL UNLIKELY.

Loath to be revolutionary and maintaining deep-rooted respect for established laws and customs, the average British worker has so far refrained from serious violence to attain his ends. With living conditions admittedly none too good and wages hardly adequate to "make ends meet," the British worker has suffered much. There have been and still are radical agitators who would unhesitatingly release order himself, or may be planincite him to bloodshed and, perhaps, worse in the attempt to gain his ends. In spite of this, however, the British worker has repelled such counsel and, in spite of the utterances of such men as Oliver Baldwin, the Premier's son, revolution would still seem remote.

Economic conditions in Great Britain have reached an almost w. Rowell on the suspicion that impossible pass for which there seems but one solution: that many of the workers must be trained in other lines and, ultimately leave the country for other parts of the Empire where other more promising opportunities, particularly in the way of agriculture, present themselves. The average British worker, it would seem, has come to a realization of the condition and will face the solution even though it may mean complete personal change for himself, and family. Revolution will probably never come to pass in Great Britain is not allowed to proceed. in spite of all the dire forebodings and there is no reason why it should if the government and the people continue as they have done in the past to exercise their good British commonsense, realizing the bound to keep liquor from Canada situation and expressing the willingness to govern themselves accordingly.

"GO WEST, YOUNG TORY, GO WEST."

Hoping not to be accused of too ready willingness to give our structions as to destination days after Tory friends advice which, of course, no one expects we would do if we-thought it was going to do them any good, the following written the application for clearance papers editorial in the Ottawa Citizen may prove of interest:

"Winnipeg," says the Winnipeg Tribune, "is the logical choice for the projected national convention of the Conservative party." With this view most persons not living in a pre-war atmosphere will at Ottawa. It is said that the minister, agree. The prairie metropolis is geographically in the right place for a national convention. But there are more persuasive reasons rights in the case. than that for holding the Conservative meeting there.

Conservatism in Canada for too long has had its centre rooted in Toronto. There, with outposts in Montreal and the Maritimes, it is firmly entrenched, and its vision has been cabined and confined the clearance papers. It is thought this by the tall buildings of Yonge and St. James Streets. It proved itself in the last election to be out of touch with the Western point of view. But a single member of the Conservative party was elected between Ontaria and British Columbia.

If the Conservative party hopes to revitalize itself and become a constructive force in Canada, it must throw off the shackling and deadening notions which masquerade for national policies in the minds of the big Toronto Tories who have hitherto dictated the course of the party. They no longer reflect the opinions of the party as a whole. They live in the past and refuse to look into the future. Their nostrums have been rejected time and again by some millions a year to the rallways. younger upholders of Conservatism west of the Great Lakes.

It is time for a fresh valuation of doctrine and a forward movement in Conservative philosophy. There can be an intelligent and constructive Conservatism, but it will not be found in the walled minds of the ultra-protectionists of Yonge Street. It can only be found in a more youthful outlook and a more positive leadership. Canadian Immigration Department Re-That outlook and that leadership will not come out of the strongholds of the old guard. Go West, Mr. Guthrie, go West!
