MODERN APLICATION OF AN OLD TEXT.

The words ("Go Ye and Tell That Fox"-Luke 13, 32) of the would be willing to bet a good Grit into Vancouver. inspired writer go to show that the Divine Teacher held the Roman doughnut against a Tory spitball that ruler in contempt. His father, Herod the Great (rather "Herod the Horrible") had dyed his soul in the blood of the innocents, and now his son, Herod Antipas, had beheaded John the Baptist, and was would get two good men and true to in February, 1823. The Tuscan Prince, following his father in cruelty and crime. Anxious that the Master would discontinue his good work among his people, the Pharisees attempted to intimidate him with the threat that Herod might kill him. But the Divine plan cannot be frustrated: "I must work the works make it Ald. Love, sounds good, doesn't and was out of touch for two day of Him that sent me while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work." The cunning trickery of evil men only in the end defeats itself.

"Go ye and tell that fox. . . . " Hunters know that the fox employs stealth and strategy in order to seize his prey, and attain his object. You rarely see him during the day, unless it be at a distance, but under cover of darkness he springs upon his victim. It is difficult to ensnare or trap him. The contract is signed the winter to carry the scientists of Joe Kristmanson became so melancholy in blood: Mephistophles and he became intimately associated. Then when the ruin of Margaret has been brought about, Faust realizes that he, himself, is in the snare of a merciless demon.

UNSEEN DANGERS

MOCK HEEDLESS YOUTH.

The fiend mocks him with the words, "Now I have thee, Faus- ing plant. tus, body, soul and all." "Thick heads," says Browning, "ought to recognize the devil, that old stager, in his trick of general utility, who leads downward, but fiddles all the way."

The engineer may be heedless of the red light ahead and hurl his train with its living freight over the precipice. The boat, ignoring the lighthouse, tumbles over the falls and is swallowed in the swirl of the whirlpool, with all its passengers. So often youth, regardless of the danger signal, or having lost control of the power which shapes destiny, makes moral and spiritual shipwreck. "Go ye and tell that fox" that long after the magnificent temples of idolatry have gone into decay; long after proud thrones and the offending pile was floated. N. "Go ye and tell that fox," and his vixen Herodias, that earthly splendor and glory is transitory and fleeting, that goodness is more, than gold and character outweighs the stars. Yes, go and tell him that his sould must be cleansed of its moral corruption and that he must accept the Saviour of mankind as his Saviour if he hopes to rule himself and his passions here, and reign with the King of Kings forever hereafter .- A sermon by Rev. J. R. Frizell, at present in pulpit of First Presbyterian Church in Prince Rupert.

Don't surrender to Pain. Pain is Nature's warning that something serious is wrong in your body. WATERFRONT WHIFFS

Edward Lipsett starts moving to waterfront; schooner Inez H. bought by Ed. Skogmo; Sid Anderson building pleasure boat

The Edward Lipsett Co. will start at the first of next week moving into its commodious and permanent new waterfront home, construction of which is being rapidly rushed to completion by the contractors, John Currie & Son. By the end of the month, the firm will be established for business in the new premises and the present quarters in the Clapp Block on Second Avenue will be vacated.

The main store building on the waterfront, described in these columns before the construction started, is a steam-heated twostorey structure measuring 30 by 80 feet. The store and offices will be contained on the ground floor *-
