CUTTING SALARIES NOT ECONOMY

A letter published on another page intimates that the cutting of the salaries of the local teachers may not really be economy because it may be at the sacrifice of efficiency. Years ago teachers were very poorly paid but during later years it is being recognized that as children are the most important asset in the community no expense should be spared in giving them the best possible training. With this in view it is poor policy to cut salaries for teachers.

If any of the teachers are not earning the money paid them, the better business would be to let them go and put good teachers in their places; but if we are to attract the best, we must pay good prices.

After all, those Vancouver people are not very different from ourselves.

Almost any day you can see a comedy by just walking up the street and keeping your eyes open.

VANCOUVER VISIT PROFITABLE

It is always profitable to get together and talk things over. It was good for Vancouver representatives to come here and get the Prince Rupert viewpoint. They will understand our problems better and with understanding will come sympathy with our aims and objects.

This is an age in which we are learning to get together in a business way. We meet at luncheons, at fraternal society and other gatherings. The retailers, the Gyros, the Rotarians, the Shriners and others meet regularly and talk and eat together. Now we have been able to sit down with the Vancouver visitors and discuss with them the many problems of the day. The outcome should be decidedly beneficial.

In order to make pumpkin pies it is necessary to first get the pumpkins. Rupert is getting the pumpkins and possibly the pies will follow, but may the good Lord grant they be not tough, or heavy, or sodden.

NEW PUBLICITY BOOKLET OUT

The new publicity booklet on Prince Rupert published jointly by the Board of Trade and the City Council is off the Rose, Cowan and Latta presses and is a very creditable publication. It is largely the work of the secretary of the Board under the general supervision of the publicity committee of the Board of Trade. It deals with all the phases of life here and its distribution in the right places should benefit the city. Like former booklets it deals with Prince Rupert as the outlet of the Peace River although it does not go into detail as much as did the previous one.

George says: Keep quiet, let the other fellow say his little say and then if you have a come-back, shoot it.

If we were only as good as our neighbors, what a wonderful old world this would surely be.

DON'T FORGET JUBILEE CELEBRATION

Great preparations are under way for the proper celebration of the Diamond Jubilee of the Dominion. Committees are working to make the affair a great success but one thing is needed and that is the hearty co-operation of the public. Doubtless this will be forthcoming in due season but if it is left to the other fellow to do it, the event will be a failure.

ADDRESSES AT THE LUNCHEON

COUNCIL OF VANCOUVER BOARD OF TRADE GUESTS OF LOCAL BOARD
 PUBLIC MEN SPEAK
 PRESIDENT FULTON, J. C. BRADY, AND MAYOR NEWTON EXTEND WELCOME TO VISITORS

A spirit of mutual good feeling pervaded the air at the luncheon in the Commodore Cafe yesterday when the council of the Prince Rupert Board of Trade was host to the executive of the visiting Vancouver Board. Rivalry between the two ports was discarded and it was unanimously agreed that more was to be gained in the matter of the general development of the province by getting together than by pulling at cross-strings.

In opening the speakers' list, W. O. Fulton, president of the Prince Rupert Board of Trade, said that Vancouver visitors were always welcome providing they were willing to allow Prince Rupert an even break and its little place in the sun. It was conceded that Vancouver was destined to be one of the great cities of the world but it could not attain to that height while parts of the hinterland were a wilderness as some were at present. The rest of the province looked upon Vancouver as the financial centre of British Columbia whose capital should go toward the development of the great natural resources with which the province was endowed. At Stewart, Alice Arm and in the central interior there were rich mineral fields which were shipping their ore out of the country for smelting, something that was not as it should be.

There were also immense timber resources but so far there was not a pulp and paper mill within 150 miles of Prince Rupert nor any sawmills to speak of, said Mr. Fulton. This was Vancouver's opportunity to do its part in the development of the province's resources. Until it did so it would not realize its destiny for the future of the city was wrapped up, with the development of the country around it. British Columbia was twenty years ahead as far as railways were concerned but was as far behind in the matter of highways. It was a disgraceful situation. The opinion of the speaker was that there should be two great highways from the British Columbia coast to Alberta, one following the Skeena River and the other the Fraser. These highways would soon pay for themselves.

MEMBER SPEAKS

J. C. Brady, M.P., expressed his pleasure, from a personal as well as a civic standpoint, at the splendid gathering of the leading businessmen of Vancouver. British Columbia to a large extent had so far lacked that personal touch which was so highly developed in the Eastern provinces. The spirit of the century was evidenced more and more in the tendency to get together in business conferences for the purpose of solving the problems of commercial development. When level-headed business men meet to assimilate information and listen to each other's problems in friendly conference the essential personal touch and mutually sympathetic feelings were developed. The visit of the Vancouver Board of Trade to the north, he felt, took on something of that aspect. The great city of Vancouver had developed beyond dreams to reality but its future and that of Prince Rupert were interdependent and one could not flourish without the other. The success of one could not be obtained without the co-operation of the other. It was not the time for heaving of bricks at each other. The members of the Vancouver Board of Trade were to be envied not alone because of their great city but because of the privileges which were theirs to largely aid in the future commercial progress of British Columbia. Sympathy, courage and a fortified mind were needed. The speaker hoped that the Vancouver visitors would go home, not only with memories of the hospitality of the people of Prince Rupert in mind, but with memories of what they had seen and the knowledge that men of the south and north must join toward successful commercial developments which would benefit both.

MAYOR'S WELCOME

Mayor Newton said he could add little to the splendid presentations of Prince Rupert's case that had been made by Mr. Fulton and Mr. Brady. He could, however, bestow the freedom of the city on the visitors and that he was both willing and pleased to do. Prince Rupert was a young place but it did not see where it had to take off its hat to Vancouver. This city, he felt, could show something for everything that Vancouver could show and, in a few things, it could perhaps go Vancouver a little better. Vancouver, to his way of thinking, would grow, probably in not many years, to be one of the largest, if not the largest, city in Canada. With the prairie provinces capable of great increase not only in population but in production the Pacific Coast was bound to develop correspondingly and its ports would all benefit. He felt that Vancouver might well lend a hand of encouragement to Prince Rupert and the north country. What was beneficial to British Columbia was mutually beneficial to Vancouver.

VANCOUVER'S VIEWPOINT

After such a generous welcome as Prince Rupert had given, Robert McKee, president of the Vancouver Board of Trade, found it difficult to express Vancouver's appreciation. As far as the weather, which local speakers had jocularly referred to, was concerned, he was ready to admit that the Vancouver visitors had been responsible. Having heard that Prince Rupert was suffering from a long drought, they had brought some rain along from Vancouver.

As regarded the suggested rivalry between Vancouver and Prince Rupert, Mr. McKee stated that he would like to give his conception of Vancouver's viewpoint concerning Prince Rupert. Vancouver people were not suffering with a scolded head even though their city had seen great development. That development had simply been because Vancouver was destined to be a great city and it was a natural growth. People of Vancouver did not expect that their city or any other should get all the business. They were fully understanding of the fact that all business would eventually flow through the proper channel and that any attempt to divert it therefrom could not have permanent results. "This north country is bound to find an outlet and where can that outlet be other than at Prince Rupert?" inquired the speaker.

The Vancouver Board of Trade Mr. McKee felt safe in saying was the only board in the province that devoted a large part of its time to assisting other boards of the province in their work. There was a committee for that very purpose and it was not an idle committee. Yet little of its work was of direct effect to the city of Vancouver.

PLENTY OF BUSINESS

"We know," said Mr. McKee "that the port of Prince Rupert is bound to do the work for which it is fitted. If you want some logical project or facility you will find no Board of Trade more willing to help you than Vancouver's. The city of Vancouver has passed the time when it wants to grow at the expense of some other place. There is plenty of business for us without trying to injure Prince Rupert or anywhere else. The tendency of the times is toward decentralization. At one time New York and Boston were the only ports in the northern United States. Now there are many very much larger than Vancouver. The day of decentralization has also come for the Pacific Coast."

Mr. McKee expressed the belief that Prince Rupert had developed remarkably well considering its years. "There is a great place for Prince Rupert and anything we can do to help its progress along the natural lines will be willingly done by us."

SOUND AND HEALTHY

Col. J. W. Nicholls referred to the progress of the fishing, lumbering and agricultural industries during the past few years to support his statement that "business in Prince Rupert today is more sound and healthy than it ever was before." Prosperity was not a thing of the future but was already here. He likened Prince Rupert to a young and healthy boy in his teens with Vancouver as the daddy. "Every boy thinks his daddy is the most wonderful man in the world and we look on Vancouver as our daddy. We share in your pride and hope for a continuation of the progress and prosperity in which we shall mutually share."

W. J. Blake Wilson spoke briefly and humorously. He claimed himself to be a pioneer of Prince Rupert, having been here before there was a house. In those days they used to blame the rain on the blasting. If the rain did nothing more it was a Godsend to the timber stands which were one of British Columbia's greatest assets.

The luncheon opened with the singing of the Buchanan version of "O Canada" and closed with "God Save the King."

LOGS ARE SCARCER THAN LAST SEASON

Bank of Commerce Report Says Lumber Industry Operates under More Favorable Conditions

The lumber industry in British Columbia continues to operate under slightly more favorable conditions says the Bank of Commerce monthly report. Stocks of fir and cedar logs are smaller than at this time last year, indicating that measures have been adopted at the point of origin to prevent the large over-production of lumber which occurred in former years. Prices, at the higher levels recently quoted, are firm and should so continue as long as the domestic markets absorb larger quantities of lumber than heretofore. The export trade has been affected to some extent by the financial crisis in Japan.

In Eastern Canada the recent heavy rains swelled the streams used to float logs and the spring drives are being conducted under ideal conditions. The lumber mills in Quebec are reported to have sold a substantial part of the material cut to date, with the exception of laths, while shipments from the Ontario mills have been increased as a result of the large building program. The market for Maritime lumber also shows some improvement and it is expected that, unless ocean freight rates which have recently been advanced each a prohibitive height, stocks will be reduced to comparatively small proportions by mid-summer.
