Countess on Visit to Canada Outfitted Before Leaving France

NEW YORK, Sept. 15. -An indication of the correct fall and winter wardrobe for the woman of fashion, as prebed by a famous French courturier, found in the distinctive wardrobe designed by this authority for the Combeautiful and best known women in French society, who has just sailed for America to visit Lady Allan of Montreal, Incorporating the new, but not the ostentitiously novel, practical without being plain, elegant and dignified, and at the same time "young." the wardrobe was chosen with the discretion and with the daring which makes the true Parisienne so distinct and enviable figure in the world of fashion. Particularly for sports during the cold autumn days in Canada, the Comtesse de Sagonzac chose "Chasseur," heavy woollen suit, suitable for motoring or shooting, with a plaid tweed jacket-blouse with reveres and doublebreasted front, which is worn with a simple straight skirt of plain brown tweeds. The accompanying top coat is of the plain brown tweed, lined with huge patch pockets and straight lines pockets are most practicable, and the through the tweed, and which slight shirring at the waist and the slender belt help keep the straight, slender lines so favored by the present mode. TWEED COAT

"Briquet" is another tweed coat with the plaid wool, and has reveres of the chosen by Madame the Comtesse. It is brown astrakan fur. The huge patch the almost invisible blue plaid running completes the ensemble. The frock is particularly interesting as it combines varying colors in soft blue, pinks, and many of the new features of the winter lavenders; around the collar and down above the belt of glittering silver, which ensemble. gives it an apearance of a shorter waistsleeves are long and tight; and its what to wear, Worth created for the of skirt has the side-ways flare that is so Comtesse a dark blue lace frock made worn with the straight skirt, pleated only in the front, is a mannish shirt' with bosom and tab and a dark blue tie with white polka dots. For cold winter days is a long coat in heavy ratine, named "La Follete," lavishly trimmed with heavy gray fox fur. This coat has also the side fullness, the long revere of fur, and a braided patent leather belt in black which fastens with a large gold buckle... FORMAL FROCKS

To wear with this coat on more formal occasions, Madame chose a simple frack in two tones of gray crepe romain. Soft chiffon velvet plays an important role in the collection of winter models shown by Worth, and the rich dignity of this deliciously soft fabric is reflected in two suits in velvet chasen by the Comtesse, both extravagantly trimmed with the long-haired, soft fox. "Tir aux Pigeons," is of that soft indefinable blue so universally becoming to all blue-eyed women. The frock is entrancingly simple, with a long plain bodice, long tight sleeves, and V-shaped neck. It is tucked around the waist. and this line is once more higher than in past seasons, and has the side drape and fullness which is also repeated in that artful simplicity of which Worth has long been the master. Collar and cuffs are of gray fox.

To rival the snow in virginal whiteness is Worth's appropriately named, "Fleur des Neigles," which is a suit all in soft white, with a pleated white chiffon velvet skirt, short white jacket, collared and cuffed in white fox, with the front. Its blouse is heavy with flowers embroidered in minute beads of collection of Worth. It has three tucks the front-an engaging and delightful

BLACK EVENING GOWN

No wardrobe is complete without one black evening gown, and the new Worth collection seems to have a background of entrancing black evening gowns, developed in velvet, crepe romain, georte, or satin. All black is exceptionally smart, but the Comtesse de Sagonzac could not resist the simplicity and rich coloring of "Le Filon," a soft black silk bordered in white and gold, with its engaging decollete and the brilliance of the rhinestone buckle gray with a huge blue velvet bird embossed with pearls and blue crystals but Madame preferred it in pink crepe romaine with a decoration in pearls and strass. Its engaging hem-line and drapery give it that dignity and poise that is characteristic of Worth evening gowns For a dancing frock, Madame chose "Pres du Couer" with its short ful skirt, simple bodice with a double line around the decolletage, and an ornament spreading itself around the hips strass. This was made for Madame in white chiffon, which is also exceedingly

smart for the evening this season. GREEN VELVET

Since velvet is so prominent a fabric in the mode for autumn and winter, no wardrobe could be complete without at least one velvet evening gown, and Madame chose "Le Plaisir" which is developed for her in a soft shade green, ornamented with two large roses on one shoulder in two shades of green, and dependent therefrom a double chain of imitation emeralds and diamonds: This gown has a bolero in the back only, and skirt is a masterpiece of the cou-

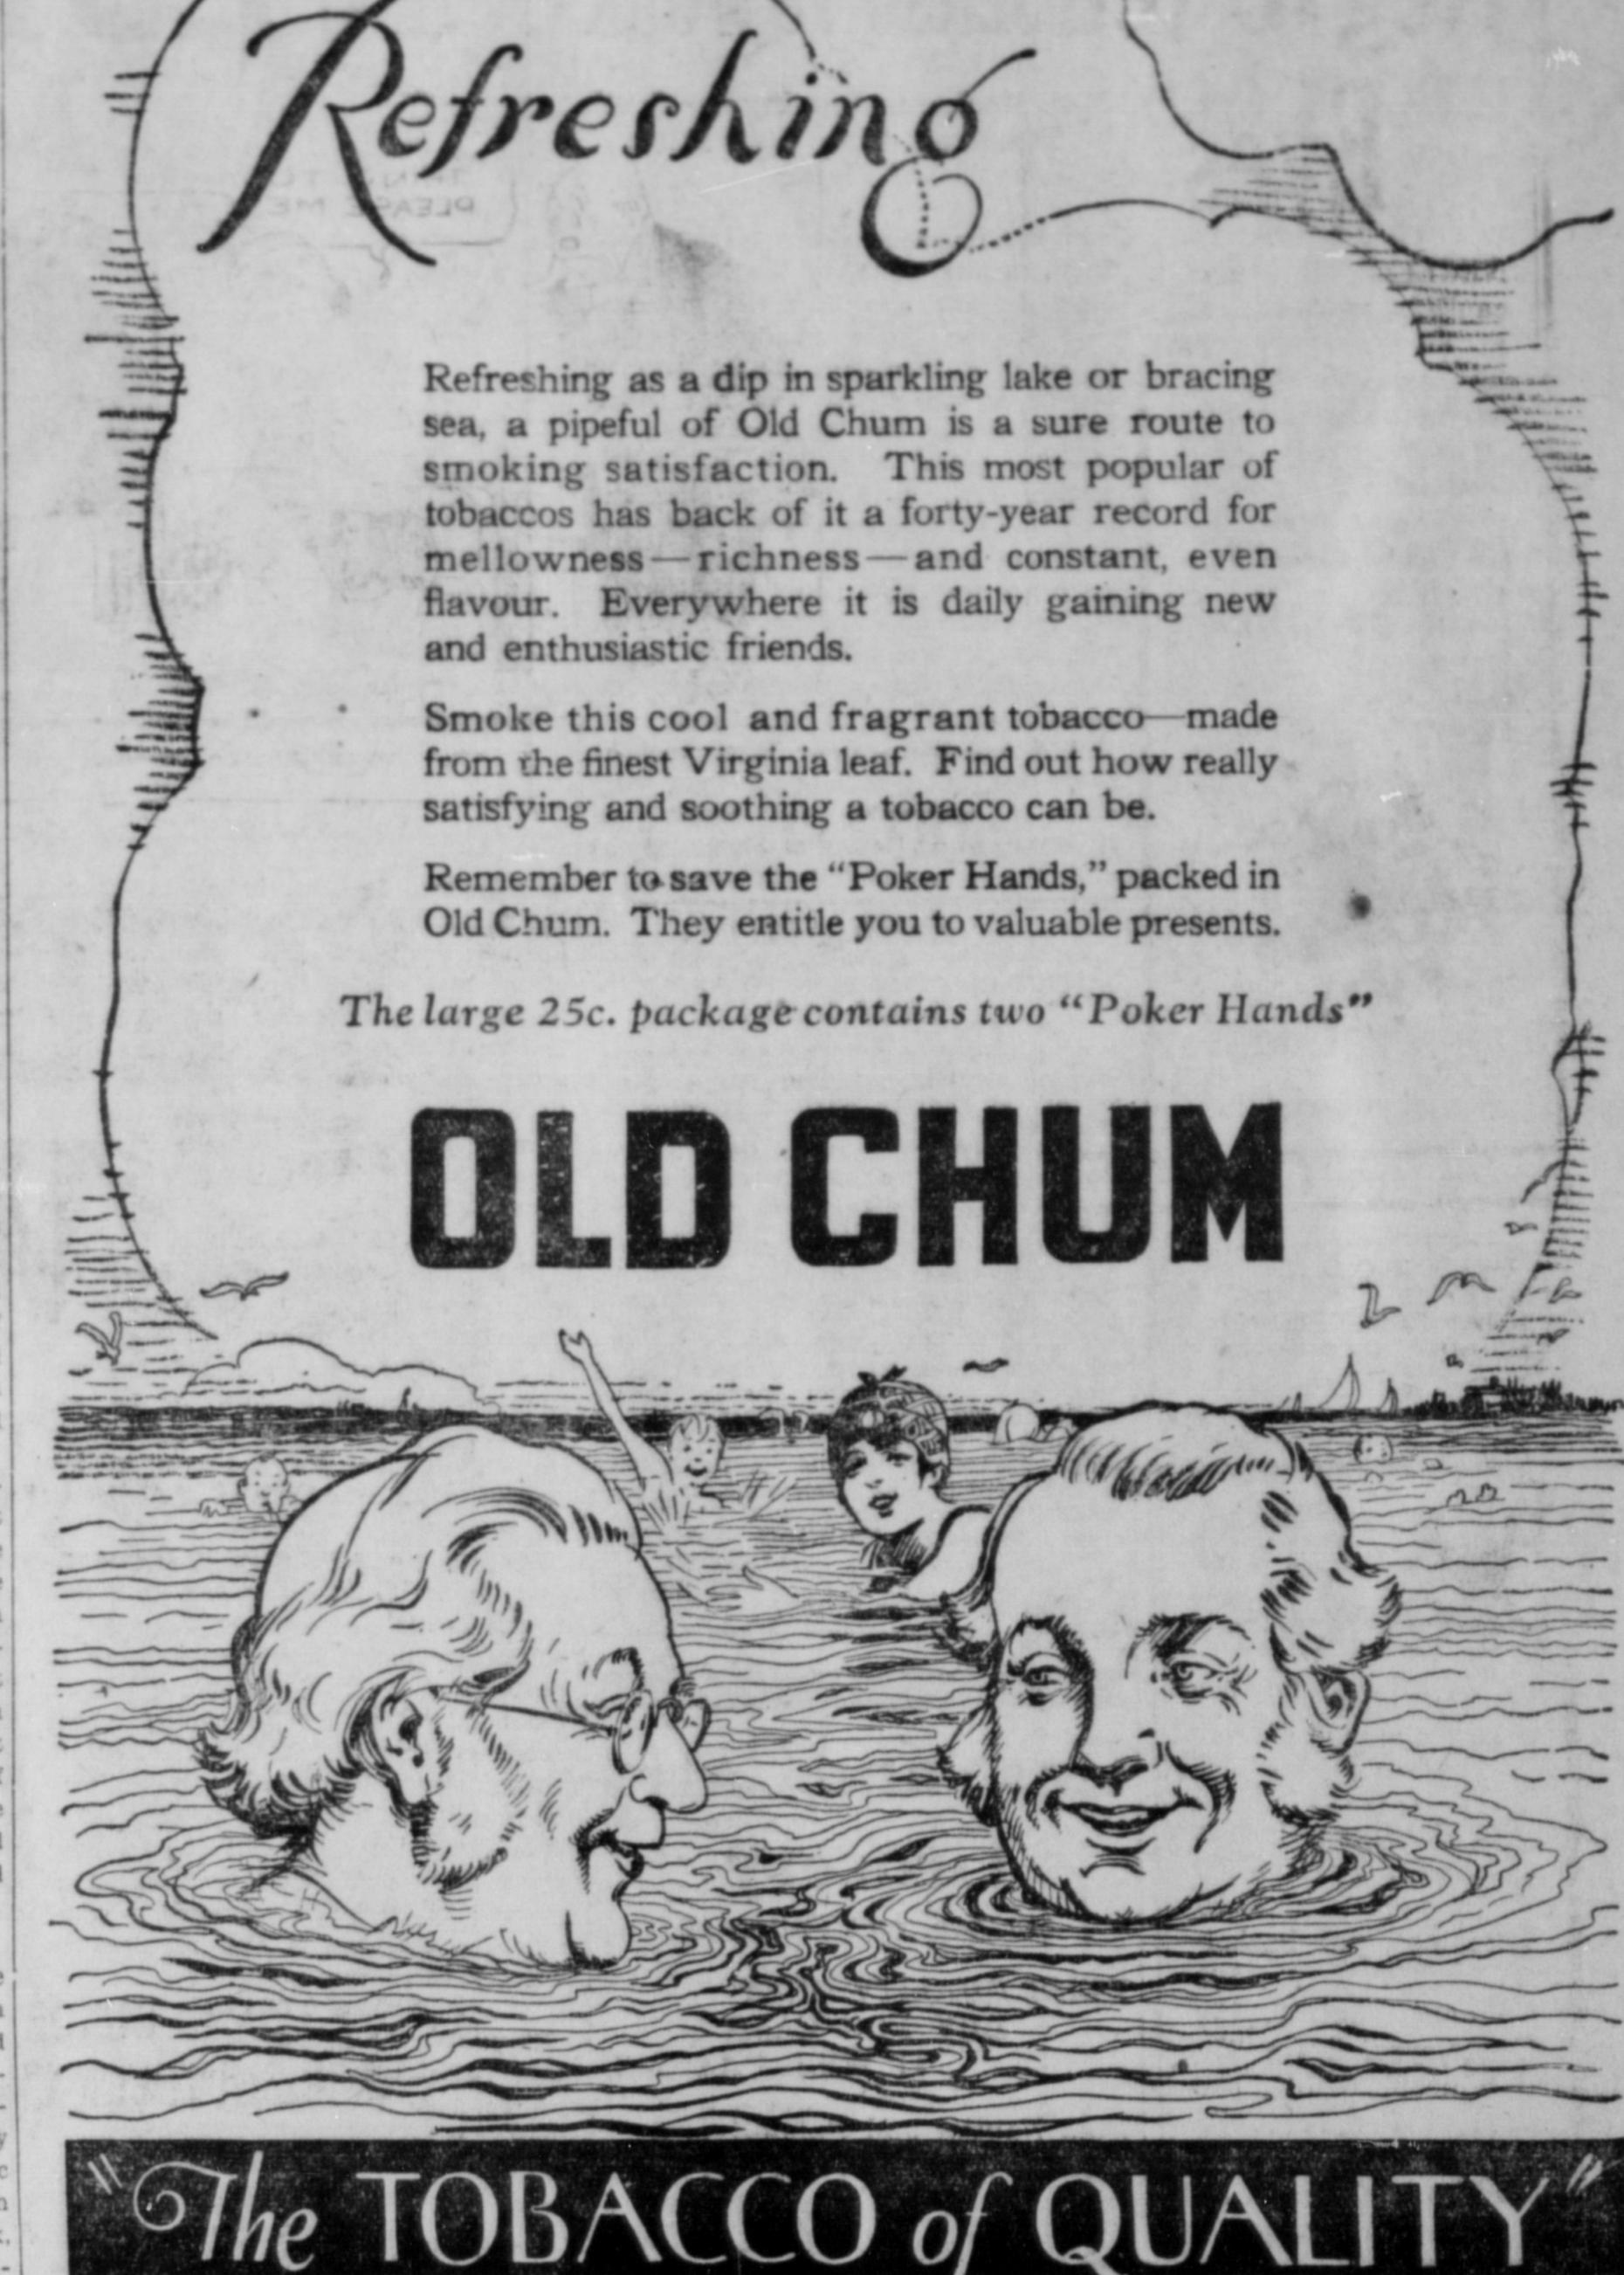

"Rose de Noel" was the only negligee chosen by the Comtesse. Its material is pale pink georgette with a band of heavy ecru lace on the sleeveless coat. Practically all the most elaborate of the Worth negligees have separate coats either with or without sleeves.

This wardrobe, chosen by one of the best dressed women in Paris, is remarkable for its simplicity and absence of extreme or strikingly new features, although it is the epitome of the season's chic and good taste. The Frenchwoman is most careful to make only subtle changes from season to season, and thus helps to make fashion's changes an evolution rather than a revolution.

SOCIAL CLIMBERS IN BRITAIN SECURE NEEDED PUBLICITY

LONDON, Sept. 16.—Certain social climbers are alleged to be adopting an ingenious expedient to obtain further public notice in their course upward. Invitations to such a function as a Royal Garden Party are naturally distributed by the hundreds and, given the requisite pushfulness, there is no great difficulty in securing one. The CANADIAN GUB" social climber, therefore, reckoning up the situation, comes to the conclusion that there is not much distinction to be gained from accepting such an invitation, but he (or more often she) may gain a gratifying amount of publicity if the invitation is declined.

> A little sheaf of notices, therefore, appears from time to time in the "social column" of certain newspapers on these lines. "Mr. and Mrs. High-flyer greatly regret they were unavoidably prevented from obeying their the Royal function last Thursday." or "Miss Muriel Gadabout it at present at present at the Duchess of Doublegloucester's reception." If you looked into Miss Muriel's real whereabouts you would perhaps find she was not at Baden Baden, but at Margate Margate. These notices, of course, are paid for advertisements. Many papers, though, will not accept them.

Social aspirants who adopt such a dodge would doubtless be crestfallen if if they realized that it is a breach of social etiquette to decline a general invitation which emanates from the highest quarter, and still more it is a grave social misdemeanour to make public one's inability to attend. The proper course is to write a letter to the Lord Chamberlain's Department, asking that under the exceptional circumstances the invitation may be withdrawn, and specifically explaining why attendance
