

LONDON CROSS-RIVER TRAFFIC

WATERLOO BRIDGE TO BE SAVED—NEW ONE AT CHARING CROSS

LONDON, April 14.—(Canadian Press Despatch).—The government's proposals for carrying out the report of the Royal Commission on London's cross-river traffic, outlined by the Prime Minister, indicate that Waterloo Bridge will be saved. The present structure is to be reconstructed and not demolished. The commission estimates the cost at £860,000.

A double-deck road-and-rail bridge at Charing Cross is a probability, at an estimated cost of seven and a half millions, and the Victoria Dock road scheme costing three millions will be carried out. In addition the proposed Ludgate Bridge at a cost of three millions, is a possibility.

The government will give the city financial aid to the extent of 75 per cent for the Charing Cross and Waterloo schemes, drawn from the road fund. Expenditure will be limited to an average of a million a year.

The government, the prime minister, said is inviting the London County Council and the Southern Railway to join with them in appointing engineers to examine the scheme for a double decker road and railway bridge put forward by the commission.

CARIBOU EATERS IN N.W. TERRITORIES STARVE TO DEATH

FORT SMITH, N.W.T., April 13.—Peter Baker arrived here recently after making a trip to the Caribou Eaters, a hundred miles from Fitzgerald. Baker reported a scarcity of furs and stated that the Eaters were starving. However, Caribou made their appearance just before he left. These people, he states, have gone to the Great Slave Lake, and he doubts if they will ever return to Fitzgerald.

When the Hudson's Bay Company house chimney caught on fire recently, it was the R.C.M.P. who went to the rescue and prevented any damage.

REJECTION OF AIR ATTACK

STATEMENT THAT AEROPLANES USELESS IN WAR AIRSHIPS COSTLY AND CUMBERSOME MEETS GENERAL REPUTATION

LONDON, April 14.—(Canadian Press.)—No book in recent times has instantly aroused greater controversy than "The Great Delusion," in which an anonymous writer, "Neon," challenges the whole policy of air power. "Neon" traverses the claims of airships and aeroplanes that they are comfortable for civil flying and useless for war.

Major-General Sir F. H. Sykes, who was chief of the air staff in 1918-1919, and controller-general of civil aviation 1919-1922, says that while the author's facts generally are accurate, the deductions from those facts are open to fundamental difference of opinion.

"What does demand an answer," Major-General Sykes says, "is the author's thesis that airship navigation is basically impracticable and his criticism that official calculations as to the utility of the ships under construction are greatly exaggerated, the value of these airships being in fact, according to him, negligible. If these charges of inability to navigate and to carry load cannot be met we are wasting money and effort in developing airships. I think we are more than justified in trying to ascertain their commercial and still more their imperial value, and if this can be proved their possible use is ocean reconnaissance." Air power cannot win a war, he concluded, but it is an essential in war, both tactically and strategically.

The attack upon the usefulness of the two giant airships now being constructed for Imperial routes have raised particularly strong objection. It is recalled that Sir Samuel Hoare, air minister, speaking in the House of Commons, said: "The two airships that we are building are very far in advance of any airships built during or since the war. The use of stainless steel, of heavy air engines, and of new methods of girder and bracing construction, all differentiate these airships most definitely from any airships that have formerly been built."

Concluding a lengthy and intensive refutation of "Neon's" statements, J. L. Garvin in the Observer says: "That we shall keep pace in the air with the best of the world's endeavor is vital, whether for peace or war—vital to the spirit, intelligence, faculty of the nation, and to the needs of the empire in the coming time."

IF ESKIMOS WIPED OUT

WHITE MEN IN NORTH WOULD BE SET BACK FIFTY YEARS

WINNIPEG, April 14.—Major L. W. Burwash, F.R.G.S., of Ottawa, but who really belongs to the Arctic Circle, stated at a meeting here recently that if the Eskimos were wiped out, the white men in the north would be set back at least fifty years. Major Burwash, is Dominion government exploratory engineer. To investigate the condition of the Eskimos and report on the resources of Canada's farthest edge of mainland, he made a memorable trip along the Arctic coast in 1925-26.

He reached the conclusion that the development of the vast territory in the north depended upon the natives. The Eskimos are essential up there the major claims, as white men could not do the work, and the Eskimos, unlike the Indians, will work. He urges careful study, and efforts to improve them. They are living precarious lives, depending on hunting and fishing mostly. This he thought was bad for them, and suggested the establishment of some kind of industry among them.

Major Burwash further stated that the Eskimos were not as well off as they were before the white man went in among them. They were disorganized, not satisfied with the old life, and had not yet gathered into the new yet. Caribou, which is an essential food for the Eskimo, was being slaughtered too easily, for they found killing too easy with a modern rifle to aid them.
