INTERNATIONAL MIND SUBJECT OF AN ADDRESS

Rev. A. Wilson Addresses Rotary Club at Luncheon Yesterday Afternoon

"Development of the International Mind" was the subject of an interesting address to the Rotary Club yesterday afternoon by Rev. A. Wilson of the United Church who urged study of international relations and getting to know neighboring peoples better. He stated that patriotism and internationalism were not opposed but went naturally together.

In opening, Mr. Wilson sketched the growth of the international movement. The spirit of the movement was more marked today than it had ever been before. Nations felt that they must come togther but there was a slow educational process to be worked out. Men who busied themselves about these things were at one time pointed to as pacifists and had to bear all the ignominy and opposition of pioneers in a new movement. To forward such a cause required the same fighting qualities required of our forefathers in standing up for their rights and working out the present system of government.

PATRIOTISM

Some people feared, the speaker said, that in favoring internationalism we were getting away from the spirit of patriotism, but that was not correct. Love of family did not prevent a man doing his duty to the community. He urged that the highest patriotism would find vent in internationalism. He was glad to know that this was one of the objects of the Rotary Club.

The speaker urged study of the subject and more effort to understand the various races. He entered a plea also for truthfulness in school text books especially in histories. It was in their efforts to make the text books of the United States fair, that some Americans had incurred the wrath of Mayor Thompson of Chicago. In Europe much of the trouble had come about through the doctoring of text books.

By studying the problems of people of other nations and races we took an important step in the development of the international spirit, Mr. Wilson stated. He instanced the case of Japan where the people were increasing rapidly and being crowded into the sea in that little country, when there was still a great deal of unoccupied country in the world only it was controlled by other nations than Japan. Her problem should be studied. The old idea of exploiting other countries had to be given up and co-operation should take the place of competition. Austria had to be salvaged by the League of Nations after the war and the post-war treaty with Germany had to be modified as it was realized that to crush any country harmed all the others.

The four thousand miles of international boundary was mentioned and Mr. Wilson quoted liberally from Wells and others in closing in making a plea for international good-will.

President Nicholls thanked the speaker on behalf of the club.

CAUGHT BAD COLD WHILE OUT PLAYING NOT PROPERLY DRESSED

Mrs. L. Mantie, Millet, Alta., writes:—"My youngest child had a very bad cold which she got by going out playing in a strong, cold wind not properly dressed.

"She got so hoarse she could hardly speak, and her throat and chest were very sore.

"I used everything available, but she received no relief until, finally, I secured a bottle of and the first few doses certainly did her good. It is wonderful how it can help so quickly."

"Dr. Wood's" Norway Pine Syrup is 35c. a bottle, large family size 60c.; put up only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

LORD BALFOUR ON SOCIALISM

Former British Leader is Opposed to Idea as a Wild One

LONDON, Dec. 16.—Lord Balfour was the principal guest of the Individualist Bookshop at a luncheon given recently at the Hotel Cecil. Lord Beauchamp presided.

Lord Balfour, in the course of his speech, said that one of the difficulties of any treatment of such a subject as Individualism or Socialism was that every one up to a certain point was an Individualist, and also up to a certain point was a Socialist.

A political society was the very worst society for carrying out those industrial efforts on which, after all, the very existence of the community depended. The Socialist was in error, not because he talked about common effort, but because he put forward the wrong society for carrying out the work.

If they left the great undertakings which had always a territorial aspect and came to the vast and varied interests which made life possible in a country like ours, he could not imagine any man looking at the problem as a productive problem, who did not think that the idea of handing that over to the central authority elected for political reasons, was not the most crazy idea that could possibly occur to men of great ability and great public spirit. They seemed in that respect completely "off the rails." In this connection could anything be wilder than the idea that we were going to help the community at large by saying that progress depended upon making one class of producers the enemies of another class? And to call that "Socialism"! Really, the fundamental question always came back to this—How were they going to make society increasingly productive?

When we talked of Socialism in a political sense, a State Socialism, we must remember that the State represented a particular section of the world's population contained within certain political boundaries. Under our modern system it was absolutely necessary for us to sell abroad as well as produce at home; in fact, in a country like ours selling abroad was at least as necessary as producing for the home consumer.

EFFICIENCY DESIRED

The real path of economic well-being, along which we must seek to raise the material conditions of our population, was increased efficiency of labor, and by that, of course, he did not mean manual alone, or mainly, but in a wide sense. We could not have too many rich men. It was quite easy to have too many poor men; that was a goal within the reach of the least competent political experimentalist. He was quite sure that the road to progress was to be found in improved knowledge, in the application of science, in improved organization, in improved harmony between all classes engaged in cooperation. Important as the question of distribution was, it sank into absolute insignificance beside the greater problem of how the human race was to extract from the natural resources of the world the greatest amount of wealth for human progress and human effort.

HARRY LAUDER NOW BURGESS OF LONDON

Three Thousand People See Him Get Freedom of City and Made Guild Brother

LONDON, Dec. 16.— Three thousand people assembled in Usher Hall when Harry Lauder—Sir Harry Lauder—received the Freedom of the City. Harry Lauder defied civic conventionalities by lapsing into song, which began—

When bluebells are blooming in June,
Sing us a simple melody.
Sing us a simple tune,
Take us back to Scotland,

"I was challenged by the Lord Provost not to sing, and I told him I would keep my promise, but I have broken it just a wee bittie," exclaimed Lauder. Before the proceedings began the audience was regaled with "I Love a Lassie" and other airs on the grand organ.

Sir Harry wore a kilt, but his whole costume was of a sober cut, and he eliminated any of his usual stage mannerisms. His ticket admitting him a burgess and a guild brother of the city recorded that the honor was in recognition of his services to the allied cause during the war, his efforts for war charities, his labors to cement the ties of kinship with the dominions, and his pro-eminence as an exponent of Scottish song and humor.

There was a pathetic moment when Lauder referred to the Scottish War Memorial. "Have you seen it?" he asked. "Go. I myself have worshipped there, for my son's name is there with his comrades."

"I have been honored by many cities both at home and broad, but this is the grand finale. You have given me another inspiration. You have driven me back to the footlights, where I expect again to be very soon."

This was Sir Harry Lauder's first public appearance since the death of Lady Lauder. Sir Harry announced he intended to found several pensions for aged people as a memorial to his wife.

SORRY HE SPOKE.

The doctor had forgotten his patient's name, but, not willing to admit it, said: "Is your name spelled with 'i' or 'e'?"

The astonished patient answered: "Why, doctor, my name is Hill."
