AMAZING STORY OF A MYSTERY

Uncanny Role Played by Lon Chaney in "The Unknown" at Week-end

Lon Chaney, always a master of mysterious roles and belief-defying disguises, and Tod Browning, who is to the screen what Edgar Allen Poe was to mystery in the printed word, have triumphed again.

The combination that produced "The Unholy Three," "The Road to Mandalay" and "The Blackbird," has gone another step forward into the mysteries of life—and the result is "The Unknown," playing at the week end here.

To say that it is Chaney's strangest role is putting it mildly. He plays an armless sideshow freak in a circus—performing everything usually done by hands with his feet. He ties his own necktie, shaves, eats and drinks, with his feet—and, in his "act" before the audience, throws knives, fires guns, and otherwise duplicates the feats of professional "armless wonders."

It is a strange mystery tale revolving about a circus, with Chaney as a sinister armless freak, ruling an underworld from his hiding place among the hundreds in a tented city. The audacity of it is amazing—an apparent harmless sideshow freak controlling the criminal underworld. His love for a dancer in the circus, his jealousy for the strong man, who is his rival, and the amazing sacrifice that climaxes the astounding story.

NEW YEAR PARTY AT NEW YORK FILMED TONIGHT'S PICTURE

"It's the biggest check I ever paid for a New Year's party," declared Sam E. Rork, producer of the stage and screen. The scene of "The Ritz Hotel on New Year's Eve," for "The Prince of Head-waiters," a comedy-drama, which comes tonight, cost the producer about $40,000 to stage. It was laid in one of the huge stages at the First National Studios in Burbank, near Hollywood, Cal., and there were more than 250 persons in "the party." Every detail of a luxurious and correspondingly expensive New York hotel with all the "trimmings" of a lavish New Year's Eve celebration was correctly staged.

"JAWS OF STEEL" IS COMING TUESDAY TO WESTHOLME THEATRE

Rin-tin-tin's latest thriller "Jaws of Steel" is a rousing story from the pen of Gregory Rogers, and Charles R. Condon made it into a screen play. It is by far the most thrilling of Rinty pictures and that is saying a lot. A waif pup, grows up on the desert, and becomes a menace to cattlemen. He finally finds the people who befriended him in his puppyhood, the Warrens and their little girl. They are in danger from crooks who are trying to get their claim because they have struck gold. What Rinty does to accomplish this will make you shout as if you were at a Big League ball game when Babe Ruth was making a home run! The picture shows here tomorrow.

"DRUMS OF THE DESERT" THRILLING INDIAN TALE

Picturization of Zane Grey's Romantic Story "Desert Bound" Comes This Week.

The tom-tom of the Indians, that insistent pulsation of the drums that carries its message of unbelievable distances and has never been satisfactorily solved by science, forms the basis for "Drums of the Desert" adapted from Zane Grey's romantic story "Desert Bound" which reaches here Wednesday and Thursday.

Translated to the screen by Paramount under the direction of John Waters, that interpreter of Zane Grey novels into terms of screen action, "Drums of the Desert" visualizes the colorful action of the original story. In it is told the tale of the Navajos and of the liquid gold that underlay their sacred shrines in the Arizona desert, the story of a white man's conspiracy to defraud them of those lands and of the frustration of that conspiracy by another white man. Underlying, as in the original, are the tom-toms of
