GHOST SCARES INDIANS BADLY

NEBRASKA APPARITION MAKES ANNUAL VISIT. MUCH TO CONSTERNATION OF NATIVES

The Screaming Ghost of Blackbird Hill, near Winnedago, Neb., tribal apparition of the Omaha and Winnebago Indians, which for more than half a century has not failed to wander around and do a lot of screaming on Blackbird Hill on the night of October 17 last, has paid its annual visit, and more than 1,000 Indians as well as a number of white folk, are greatly excited over the affair.

Watching for the ghost has become an institution on the reservation as well as in the surrounding towns, and regardless of wind, rain and weather, hundreds of both reds and whites grab their coffee pots and picnic baskets on the anniversary and go out to Blackbird Hill to hear the screams and see the sights.

The screams last for five minutes, they say, but the sights are extremely short—sometimes there being no "sight" at all, but the screams are always heard.

APPEARS AS WOMAN The ghost appears as a tall woman dressed in white, a shadowy figure withal. The apparition is wafted to and fro by the wind and appears to wring or wave its hands and to utter shriek upon shriek.

Screeching Ghost made its appearance. COMES AT MIDNIGHT The wraith appears shortly before midnight, just at the hour when the Omaha Indian tradition says the woman and her children were killed. The husband had been killed the afternoon previously, but the wife never knew his fate.

Blackbird Hill is the highest point on the Missouri River between Sioux City and Omaha. It received its name from old Chief Blackbird, famous Omaha Indian leader, who is buried on its summit.
