Deserving of Medals

Many a great war hero deserved a medal he did not get. The only difference between his act of heroism and that of the man who won the medal was that his action passed unnoticed. How often, too, does the family doctor deserve a medal he doesn't get, braving disease and pestilence, and dangers lurking unseen beside the patient's bed. Does he not deserve all the assistance skill and accuracy can bring to his aid in his battles for other's lives?
