James A. Brown of Ecstall River Returns to Plant After Abortive Deal for its Purchase

"Going back to carry on business in the same old way," remarked James A. Brown, operator of the Ecstall River sawmill at Brown's Falls, who left on this morning's train for Port Essington following the breakdown of negotiations for the purchase of his mill and site for the purpose of establishing a pulp mill

Though Mr. Brown modestly remarks that his mill is only a "one horse affair," it may be noted that it is perhaps the only lumber plant that has operated north of Vancouver during the past two decades without financial difficulty. Mr. Brown is reported to have become at least moderately well off as a result of the operation of the mill which he established there is 1903. He has a daily single shift output of 16,000 feet and, during the 24 years, has cut exclusively for the local markets, finding a particularly profitable trade in the supply of boxes to the canneries.

Mr. Brown is one of the real pioneers of the north coast of British Columbia. Before setting up on the Ecstall River. he was manager and part owner of the sawmill at Georgetown which is to be closed down next spring after having

THE DHIFT NEWS

FIRST EFFORT TO CROSS ATLANTIC BY AIR IN YEAR 1856

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Sept. 30. Thumbing the pages of local history, Bridgeport has found that the first attempt at trans-Atlantic aerial voyaging originated here in 1856, when the balloon "Bridgeport" set out from here

The trip was not completed. The miles from Bridgehampton, near the southern shore of Long Island, where it alighted, with its crew of five, little the worse for their hazardous adventure. The projected trip was obviously hopeless. Their motive power was to have been the winds, which they hoped would waft them across the 3,500 miles of ocean. In their short trip the balloon ascended to a height of 23,000 feet. or nearly five miles, which was for some time an altitude record. Sheets of ice coated the bag and forced it down.
