SETBACK FOR COMMUNISTS

The setback for the Communists in China seems to indicate that the country is not going to follow, immediately at any rate, in the wake of Russia and that there is possibility of a reaction against Red propaganda even in that country. The difficulty there is an immense illiterate population, superstitious, and easily influenced by anything that seems likely to give it a temporary advantage. However, there is also a very strong movement of young educated Chinese who have the interests of their country at heart and who see in the Nationalist movement the hope of their country.

PATH UP MOUNTAIN

Several years ago W. E. Williams enthused the people of this city with the idea of making a trail up Mount Oldfield for the use of tourists but, owing to lack of funds and organization, the scheme was allowed to drop. The chief difficulty was to decide on the route to be followed, it being then suggested that the proper approach would be from the other side of the mountain. The building of the new highway makes that route possible. If the trail is made on a route that can be developed into an automobile road it will be part of a permanent work which will be one of the finest things possible for the city. It is to be hoped that this time the scheme will be carried out and the trail actually built.

LINDBERGH'S FLIGHT

Another record has been made by the young American aviator, Colonel Lindbergh. He has made a flight from Washington to Mexico City and although he got lost in a fog en route he picked up his bearings and proceeded, reaching his objective a few hours late.

Lindbergh is a winner, perhaps a matter of good fortune or perhaps because he knows his business better than others. At any rate, so far he has made good and more than ever will be the idol of his countrymen.

Canadians always admire anyone who is a good sport and they will be glad to know that Lindy succeeded. Possibly now he may turn his attention to the Pacific where there are plenty of honors to be won.

ALASKA FISHERY PROTECTION

Fishery protection in Alaska is to be a real thing. The fish are to be protected at any price. That seems to be indicated by the regulations published yesterday for that territory. Traps seem to have come under the ban to some extent and it is generally conceded that traps have done a great deal of injury to fish.

Both in Alaska and British Columbia there must be protection, for without it the fish would soon all be gone. Protection without injustice is the ideal but it is difficult.

ROCK FOR CEMENT TO BE QUARRIED AT DAHL ISLAND IN ALASKA

Word has been received by Captain L. H. H. Jennings that a 2000 ton barge loaded with machinery is about to leave Seattle for Dahl Island, where the Pacific Coast Cement company will construct a plant the coming spring for taking out cement says the Ketchikan Chronicle.

Wharves and warehouses and landing facilities will be constructed as well as a plant which will be equipped for taking out the lime and loading it on the steamers for shipment to the plant in Seattle where it will be manufactured into commercial products.

From all accounts Dahl Island, on the west coast and near Ketchikan, will be a busy place as soon as the first barge arrives with its material.

SEES BEAUTY IN CANADIAN HOME GARDEN

Premier of Britain Points to This Country as Object Lesson

LONDON, Dec. 15.—Premier Stanley Baldwin, in formally opening the new Kingston by-pass road recently, said he was struck during his recent visit to Canada, by the beauty of the homes and gardens of the people of all classes, along the roads on which he had been driven. Speaking of the roads in England Mr. Baldwin declared there was nothing that visitors from overseas cared more to see than the country villages and country lanes. He advocated their development and deprecated any "ugly surroundings" or "hoggish behavior" on these roads.

Speaking of the Kingston road, which he was opening, the premier said:

"The origin of this great road may be traced back to those days when we were most anxious about unemployment, shortly after the conclusion of the Great War. The government of the day felt great anxiety on the subject, and they set up large schemes of road work."

ENGLAND A SANCTUARY

"New roads such as these will do for London what is of the greatest importance. They will bring along these great arteries a wealth of real country. If we make these roads what they may be, the roads of our dreams, we shall incur the gratitude not only of our own fellow countrymen, but of visitors from overseas. There is nothing that the visitors from overseas care more to see, nothing that touches them more than our country villages and our country lanes. They like to look on England as a sanctuary and a shrine. We are making a new start with these roads. Local authorities today have far-reaching powers. We can regulate advertising, we can go in for town planning, and there has been recent legislation on the control of building lines."

Roads around London for too many years past have consisted of mean-looking houses and dingy forecourts. Let us try, if we can, to have along these roads houses with gardens. Nothing struck me so much during my recent visit to Canada, right through the cities of the west, as to see beautiful little houses and gardens, not of rich people, but belonging to people of all classes right up to the road, carefully tended and looked after. It made it a pleasure to drive out into the country from any of those western cities."

ROADSIDE MANNERS

"It is supposed to be an advantage to a doctor to have a good bedside manner. I wish to goodness all our people had good roadside manners. Let us try to start today to inculcate it both in people who use the roads and in people who live along them. There ought to be an unwritten code that the defiling of any of them, or by upsetting or spilling litter upon them, should be to bar any man from entering any decent club or any decent home circle."

BALDWIN CALLS ON JOURNALISTS

Speaking in the Parliament Press Gallery Expresses Regard for Influence of the Press

LONDON, Dec. 15.—The Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin, prime minister, penetrated the other day into a portion of the Houses of Parliament which it is doubtful if any man holding his august office has explored before during his term of office. Mr. Baldwin's excursion was to the Press Gallery—or rather that variety of rooms set aside for the exclusive use of newspaper men having the entree to the Houses of Parliament. Mr. Baldwin unveiled a tablet containing the names of the "Gallery" Chairmen since 1881. "I am glad to have the chance," he said, "of meeting the people who really make and unmake men and governments. I present myself with trepidation before you. I perhaps have been a little less effusive than some of my colleagues in tributes to the press as a whole, but I have a most warm regard for the working journalist wherever I meet him."

The English parliament is perhaps the most hospitable parliament in the world towards journalists. Practically what the British parliament gives to journalists is a club. Not only are there writing rooms and typing rooms, but there is a dining room, a smoke room, a library, a newsroom, a chess room and a tea room. The writers in the chief writing room are warned by an automatic indicator of what is going on in the House. Telephones are simply squandered all over the gallery rooms, and connections are made so quickly that the London telephone service might very well learn from the system in use how these things can be done.

NIGHT WINDS IN MOUNTAINS

A meteorological phenomenon found among the high mountains and noticeable in many places in Waterton Lakes national park in southern Alberta is the night wind from the mountain tops. During the heat of the day the warm air rises from the valleys but at sunset a current of air from the peaks rushes downwards, bringing with it the scents of pines and larches and it may be of the flowers of some alpine meadow a couple of thousand feet above.

The Least Excitement Made Her Heart Palpitate and Flutter

Mrs. Ambrose Orser, Elginburg, Ont., writes:—"I suffered for some time with a bad heart which seemed to be controlled by my nerves. The least little excitement would cause it to flutter and palpitate, and at times I would have real bad spells. I suffered in this way for some time when, one day, I saw advertisements, so decided to try them. I had only taken a few boxes when I noticed that I felt better, so I continued taking them and in a short time my heart felt entirely different."
