MALAY PEOPLE

THAT IS OPINION OF REV. W. F. BARFOOT GIVEN IN ADDRESS TO ROTARY CLUB

LEARNING LESSON OF FORCE RESPONSIBILITY OF CANADIANS TO ORIENTALS URGED BY SPEAKER

WITH SOLEMN WARNING Either the Oriental will learn the lesson of force and emulate us in getting power by our methods or he will learn the higher lessons of tolerance and respect for others and understanding. In that lies a great responsibility with the white race, according to W. F. Barfoot, who addressed the Rotary Club yesterday on the People of the Malay Pensinsula.

Mr. Barfoot explained that the Peninsula was very important as having a very important British naval base at Singapore and also for its production of tin and rubber. Three quarters of the world's supply of tin comes from this pensinsula and over half of the rubber. It was not of this, however, he wished to speak. He was more interested in the people than in the commercial aspect of the country.

KNOWING AND UNDERSTANDING The difficulty today was that people did not appreciate those of other colors or races as they should. It was only by knowing and understanding them that they could be appreciated. There were in the Straits Settlements approximately a million and a half Chinese, a million and a half native Malays and three quarters of a million laborers from India. Most of the wealthy people were Chinese but the rubber plantations are all owned in Europe and the Europeans in the country are therefore practically all salaried men.

Mr. Barfoot told of the boom in rubber a few years ago when plantations which had no value were sold to innocent investors. As a rule shares in the good plantations could not be purchased as they were not for sale. UNIVERSITY OF EAST Most of the Chinese worked in the nines, the plantations were worked by natives from India. Both the Chinese and Indians returned to their homes in a few years and often could then live independently. While in the country the children were educated better than they would be even in England. These people returned to their homes with new sense of prosperity and independence, to inculcate the new idea into the people at home. Well were the Straits Settlements called the University of the East. The influence of the country was tremendous and even the Nationalist movement in Canton was said to be traceable to it. The Malay people were the most interesting people in the East. They were anything but the savages they were represented to be in the encyclopedias. Neither were they crude barbarians. The Malayan was a natural gentleman despising commerce and not caring for work. As you got to know him you were astonished at his character. Planters do not like him because he will

GOVERNMENT RESPECTED

The speaker told of the administration of the country under the British. The natives look on the government officials as fathers because they feel that they always get justice from them, tempered with mercy. A lot of the land is held by the government in trust for the natives, who at present do not appreciate its value. The British are often unfairly criticized and compared with the Dutch in Java, where the natives were enslaved and made to work. The result is that now they are all workers. A Malayan will drive a car because he feels it is dignified but he will not do menial

The old custom of running amok but which had now been given up, was decribed by Mr. Barfoot. It was usually done by a wealthy man who had been crossed in love. He brooded over his grievance until worked up into a frenzy. Then he bound his own limbs to prevent feeling or bleeding and started off with his weapon and killed everybody he met, men, women or children, until himself killed. While the Malays scorn the sordid commercial attitude they are very fond of sports and especially excel at football. One of their teams was never beaten. They are also keen on boxing and horse racing. They play football

At present the government is trying to reintroduce the native arts and get the natives interested in them. "In all our vaunted progress," said the speaker in conclusion, "we have not learned to appreciate our Oriental neighbors. We have a duty to perform toward them. They have to be educated LOCATING HATCHERIES toward friendly relations. Theirs is an older civilization and in many ways a higher morality. If we show them nothing but force they will learn the Officials Now Visiting Suitable Parts of have been agitating for the erection lesson of force and adopt it. There is a serious responsibility on us as Canadians and British."
