Neglected Eyes

NEGLECT is doubtless the cause of most of the ills that afflict humanity. This is so self evident that it seems hardly necessary to tell you. If your eyes are giving trouble, have them attended to—and at once.

OF ALL absurdities in the kingdom of foolishness, surely the loss of eyesight through neglect is the most inexcusable.

DON'T lose health and efficiency through neglect. Come and see!

EXCITEMENT AT CATALAWRECK

Two Big Powerboats Nearly Come to Grief on Dangerous Shoal Between Burnt Cliff Id. and Belletti Pt.

Prince Rupert people who went out on Sunday by gasboat to visit the wreck of the steamer Catala on Burnt Cliff Island near Port Simpson had plenty of thrills besides that of looking over the big derelict. While the situation for some of them looked probably serious enough for a few minutes at least, the attending incidents afforded enough excitement for the large majority making the trip, which was sufficiently rough and cold, fully worth while. Two near strandings, which, happily turned out to have no serious consequences, featured the excursions.

It was about 3:30 in the afternoon when the forestry boat Lillian D. with Ranger R. C. Scott at the wheel and having on board a party consisting of District Forester R. E. Allen and Mrs. Allen and family, Assistant Forester E. E. Gregg, Fire Inspector and Mrs. R. H. Leighton, Mr. and Mrs. G. A. McMillan, R. Knox and others, as she was about to leave the wreck for home, bumped at the high tide on the perilous reef which extends across the southerly mouth of Pearl Harbor between Burnt Cliff Island and Belletti Point. As the vessel keeled over on the port side and started to swing up and down in the swell that was rolling in from Chatham Sound, the near panic that occurred on board could easily be imagined. The powerboat Pull Moon, with Dr. W. T. Kergin, the owner, in charge, and George Frizzell with the Laura F., both of which were nearby, proceeded immediately to the rescue and took the passengers of the stranded vessel. The Pull Moon then put a line on board the Lillian D. but efforts to pull her off failed. Happily the B.C. Towage & Lightering Co.'s wrecking boat Salvage Princess, Capt. Paul Armour, with a big crowd of excursionists, within half an hour, hove in sight from Prince Rupert, and with the tide still making, released the Lillian D. with one good yank.

Ships of relief at the salvage of the Lillian D. were soon to be changed to further gasps of excitement when, just as the first vessel was pulled off, Prince Rupert Boat House powerboat "28," with a large group of excursionists on board, was seen to be in the vicinity.

While standing by the Lillian D., the Pull Moon drifted to the reef herself but was in no trouble. The clump of rocks where the accidents occurred is a mean place, requiring fullest of knowledge of the surroundings to successfully navigate.

Five boats made the trip out to the wreck during the day. They were the Pull Moon, Laura F., Lillian D., Salvage Princess and "28." All had rough trips and many people were seasick, a fresh northwest wind cutting up the waters of Chatham Sound considerably.

Those making the trip aboard the Laura F. were George Frizzell, Douglas Frizzell, Bob Frizzell, Harry Astori, H. F. Pullen, Fred Smith, Sid Hunter and G. A. Hunter.

All the excursionists were safely home by 8 o'clock in the evening, a big fire, apparently in the bush west of Metlakatla providing the final subject of the day for interest and speculation. As far as could be made out, the blaze must have been started by hunters or campers and had spread up the hillside from the shore. From a distance it looked like a fire in Metlakatla but, on coming closer up, it was found that that was not the case.

board and Capt. Hans Berquist in charge, bumped onto the same shoal a short distance farther out and also stuck, swinging in the rollers. Apparently there was even further excitement on that vessel for constant blasts from her whistle was sounded and the distress flag was promptly run up. Some of the passengers had been put in the lifeboats of the Salvage Princess, having towed the Lillian D. to the Salvage dredge, was just turning out to go to the aid when the "28" floated herself off the reef.

BRITISH WOULD NOT TOLERATE FASCIST MOVE

(Toronto Globe)

Fascism is now five years old. It was at the end of October, 1922, that the King of Italy, fearing a revolution, called Mussolini to Rome and made him Prime Minister. Since then he has been not only undisputed dictator, but the idol of a very large body of his fellow-countrymen, both at home and abroad.

Created for the purpose of combating communism, Fascism has set up a system almost equally dangerous, and one which would never be tolerated by people who had been reared under British institutions. Mussolini has established a powerful State machine, under which everything is made subservient to his will. Capital and labor are completely under his command; and neither the employer nor the worker is a free agent. The inexorable decrees of the dictator must be obeyed, down to some of the minutest details of home life, for even at the baptism of children parents are forbidden to bestow names of their own choice and its leader disapprove. Freedom is dead in Italy, and no one dares to express an opinion which is not in accord with Fascist principles.

For five years the system has met with a considerable degree of success, but this has been almost entirely due to the popularity of Mussolini himself. The members of his Government have been of little real assistance to him, and it is doubtful if he would wish that it should be otherwise, for it is essential that neither his personal popularity nor his power should be shared by others. He has, of course, a militia which is devoted to him, and a servile press.

But there can be nothing really permanent about Fascism. If Il Duce should lose his grip on the people, or be removed from the scene, the whole fabric which he has set up would probably topple over, and Italy would be faced with revolution.

LONDON FASHIONS

Tweed is Popular This Year in World's Metropolis but Most of Coats Trimmed With Fur

LONDON, Nov. 14.—Complete outfits are now designed for every time of day so that no wrong choice of an accessory may spoil the whole.

This passion for detail starts with the correct building up of a tweed outfit with its necessary jumper suit, usually a tweed skirt and an angora jumper, with perhaps a suitable cardigan. Tweed is popular this year and a great many top coats of brown tweed, trimmed with fur, are made. Usually a jumper suit matches them in color. Sometimes the accessory suits are of fancy woollens or jersey mixtures and many of the jumpers are striped or patterned in new ways. On others the patterns are of plaids of the material of the skirt if it is not too heavy. All kinds of jumper tops seem permissible if made simply, and wool and metal woven materials are freely used. The covering tweed coat is better designed than tweed coats were formerly, and there are homespuns where the patterns suggest seams and pockets, fine "nervures" or pinched tucks. Tweed coats for travelling are worn over tweed suits with jerseys or angora jumpers, the top coats being roomy with wide crossover fronts. Few of them, however, are not trimmed with fur on the roll collars, cuffs, and even on fronts and sides.

Afternoon Wear
Afternoon outfits take various forms. There are tailored suits with long coats of velvet or fancy woollen materials made with diagonal crossovers. They are usually trimmed with fur, dyed fox, lynx, or some short curled fur; the sleeves widen towards the wrist or into big pointed cuffs, and the skirt of the coat often flares and shows a fur piecing running upwards from the hem in a point. The frock that is worn with velvet cloth coats may be simply tailored in satin beaute made with plaicings in the reverse, or there may be a more complicated lame jumper and skirt of velvet or satin, or a velvet, silk, or crepe afternoon frock. Many afternoon frocks have jabots at the side of the bodice and draperies at the side of the skirt and they are almost all longer in the skirt than they have been.

The uneven line is seen in most of the formal afternoon frocks but not in tailored frocks, many of which have unobtrusive lingerie trimmings and are decorated with fancy buttons and finished with a belt. All kinds of incrustations are put on tailored frocks, which are more complicated than they look at first. Tops and skirts are contrasted in some dresses; there are also separate jumpers and skirts; afternoon materials vary and the materials decide the cut and design. Besides velvets, satins, and silks there are more antique in light weaves and patterns, mouseline, crepe de sole, and metal materials; but the jumper tunic with a velvet skirt is expressed in various ways.

For Evenings
For the evening indoor wraps make a complete ensemble with dinner and dance frocks. They take many forms; the material of the dress is usually allied with lame, velvet, or metal lace. A white crepe chiffon frock has a long shawl cape with a design of black ring velvet scimitars; another, of pale gold lame, has a great square of the lame with a deep metal lace border as its trimming. Some are finished with wired Medici collars or Elizabethan ruffles. Picture frocks have picture wraps to complete them.

Styles in Shoes
The new autumn and winter shoes are in keeping with the fashions. Many out-of-door shoes are dark brown to tone in with the havanas and cocoa tones that are in favor, and there are the usual trimmed shoes. On Court shapes are contrasting collars that give an elegant line. Toes are shorter and heels are straighter for indoors, and for out-of-door heels are fairly low. A new leather called "vici," which is as soft as glove kid, is popular for out-of-door shoes, as it goes well with dark-colored stockings. A new walking shoe called the "monk's shoe" is made with a long plain front, a short tongue, and a button fastening; it is comfortable and is made of cabrogoya lizard, patent leather, and brown sealskin. Embossed leather in autumn shades and light gold markings is for afternoon shoes. For evening there is a return to multicolored brocades; they are now made in Court shapes, they look well, and they go with a number of frocks.

Gaiters
Boxcloth gaiters that come over the knees, stockinette gaiters, and Highland spatees are for chilly days. A new Wellington rubber boot sometimes with an astrakhan top is for wet days in the country. There are also new goshettes of proofed gabardine with turnover velveteen tops to protect evening shoes on damp nights, and velveteen proofed evening boots serve the same purpose.

COMMUNITY LIFE IN DOUKHOBOR VILLAGES

University Professor Regrets Certainty of Breakup of System

WINNIPEG, Nov. 14.—Prof. Sissons, of Victoria College, Toronto, writes in the Free Press about the Doukhobors: "What is to happen to the villages? They named the grouped apartments consisting of two large square-built houses, and lower connecting house, surrounded by orchard and flower and vegetable gardens. In each five members of the larger family in the ancient clan fashion. When a young man marries he brings his wife to his father's home, and in primitive fashion the great house gives shelter to blood relatives and such others as they may choose to live with. And the women divide the work of house-keeping, so that for a week a woman will do house-work, and for the next two or three week will work in the fields, preferring usually the latter occupation to the former. Their houses, like their persons, are scrupulously clean, with floors neatly painted and linen spotless.

"These heavens of rest, set in flowers, what will become of them? Should the community break up—and most observers do not give it more than five years to live—the transition from community to individual effort will mean the wrecking of much that is now lovely to see. For if Canada has something to teach the Doukhobors, they have also something to teach Canada."

"HOME BEAUTIFUL"

"THE BUSINESS OF HOUSEKEEPING"

Aside from the weight of tradition there is no fundamental argument for washing at home. From a social point of view, extra expense, and from an individual standpoint, it involves much waste of labor.

From the larger economic point of view the commercial laundry will be supported by the progressive woman who wants to see home work brought to a higher level of harmony with our present industrial development.
