Vessel with Human Freight Drifted Across Pacific to Cape Flattery from Japan

SEATTLE, November 1. - With the emaciated frozen bodies of two Japanese propped up in the stern, a fishing smack, believed to have drifted across the Pacific, was picked up off Cape Flattery by the American mail liner, Margaret Dollar. The pair had evidently died of starvation after being helplessly tossed about by the seas. A radio message from the ship's captain said the if normation secured indicated that the men had been dead for weeks.

The Margaret Dollar is towing the derelict with the lifeless human cargo to Port Townsend where they will be handed over to the U.S. authorities.

There seems to be very little doubt that the fishing smack and its two dead occupants drifted clear across the Pacific Ocean, Clifton Peace, of the American Mail Line Company said.
