OPIUM TRAFFIC IS STILL LARGE

British Government's First Public Report Illustrates Difficulties in Restricting Traffic

LONDON, Aug. 17.—(By Canadian Press.)—That the illicit traffic in opium and other drugs continues on a large scale all over the world is shown in the report on the control of the traffic by the British Government, which the Home Office this year has for the first time made public. The report proves however, that the revenue and police officials of the British Empire are alert in detection and quick to confiscate. It demonstrates, also, that relevant information is instantly conveyed to any foreign country that may be concerned, and to the league of nations, while it testifies to the efficiency of the methods always advocated by the British delegates at Geneva.

It is not possible at present to control the growth of a plant which is cultivated freely in China, Persia and Turkey, and in restricted quantities in India, but it is possible to strictly regulate its preparation for medicinal use and the complicated process by which raw opium is transmuted into morphine, heroin and other derivatives, and to supervise its distribution.

The British government has controlled the traffic since 1920, and although a new international instrument was signed in 1925, the international central board which in future is to supervise the traffic, has not yet been established. The report is interesting as showing how the British government's methods have largely been embodied in the new instrument, which is not yet fully ratified.

ROMANCE OF CRIME

Half-seen beneath the surface of official reticence in this report lies the romance of criminal stealth foiled by the alertness of revenue detectives. A certain box on board a steamship plying between Amsterdam and Bluefields, Nicaragua, was, for instance, held up at Kingston, Jamaica. After communication with the Government of Nicaragua, it was found that the consignee was not the owner of a legally inscribed establishment for the sale of drugs, and that the consignment addressed to him contained more opium than the medical practitioners of Nicaragua would have consumed in the ordinary course in 15 years.

A particularly interesting seizure was made at Southampton. A shipment of a mixture labelled "Lubrinole" excited suspicion. On analysis this was found to be morphia mixed with some unctuous substance, from which it could later easily be recovered by chemical process. A new artifice of the drug traffickers was thus revealed. The shipment was from France to the Far East through Canada.

Full particulars were communicated to the League, which already has records of many ingenious tricks—of the drug being passed from place to place in the lining of hats, in hollow walking sticks, in the stuffing of chairs, in chocolates, and so on. The Advisory Committee on Opium should, indeed, in time collect a record of crime to which Dr. Watson might turn for material now that Sherlock Holmes has really made his final bow.

CURIOSITY IS AID LEARNING

Pupils Teach Themselves Through First Hand Experience in New Cambridge School

LONDON, Aug. 17. — (By Canadian Press).—There are many kinds of schools for the young in this world. But a 'different' one is the Malting House school at Cambridge. There the main idea is to use the force of curiosity for the development of thought and knowledge. The children within invisible limits are allowed to do what they like. There is a multitude of things which the child loves to play or work with—things which would be forgotten elsewhere. There are work-rooms ,carpenter's shop and a garden. And there is a sandpit which can be flooded; also a climbing apparatus in which the children can be as agile as monkeys.

Above all this school has animals. The children pet them and look after them. One of the animals died and they wanted to know why. Quite naturally the children cut up and 'looked inside' the dead creature; and this became the first of a series of cuttings-up in which the children discovered that some animals have bones and some have not.

Another instance of the way this school works is the see-saw. Two children are not necessary, for beneath it are hooks on which weights can be hung. The child experiments with the effect of the weights at different distances from the centre and does not know it is at the beginning of problems in mathematics and physics. From the see-saw to the ordinary weights and scales in a simple transition.

The school's score of pupils are unusually intelligent children, the offspring of professional people in Cambridge. Some of the pupils remain at the school through lunch time, and concoct their own menus. Hence they must write a list for the cook, and may add to the joy of learning to read and write by using the typewriter while the necessity of keeping within the financial allowance per head entails the use of arithmetic. Certain pupils started quite young, before they were three years of age, in fact.

SUCCESS OF EXPERIMENT

The success of the experiment naturally depends on the skill with which the force of curiosity is guided, especially through that period when the child's curiosity changes from "what is happening" to "what will happen next?" Hence the directors provide varied equipment to ensure acquaintance with a fact at the moment of its interest.

There are teachers, of course. A good deal of interest was roused when the school recently advertised for another teacher, because it was set forth there was need of a teacher who should be a scientist of the first order; and who should not so much teach, as introduce children to science and scientific methods. Environment is made the main factor in teaching. It is sought to restrict it however, so that the education of the child shall follow well-defined paths.

The experiment has aroused a good deal of interest in Britain and educationists are eagerly waiting for definite results.
