STRONG MOVEMENT FOR PEACE

There is in convention at Ostend today an international organization that is growing stronger every day and that stands very strongly for international peace and good will. This organization is Rotary International and the delegate from Vancouver to the convention is Edward Lipsett who is well known here.

The Rotary Clubs take every possible means of improving the relations existing between different countries, particularly those that are neighbors. They fraternize across the border and gradually help to bring about a change in international relationships through the cultivation of international friendship. This movement will probably continue to grow and will be a powerful influence toward peace.

The tourists who arrived today are wondering who it is that is always lying about the climate of Prince Rupert.

The difficulty with some of the puppies around town is that they have not yet had time to get their eyes open.

WOMEN ALSO JOINING FORCES

Women also are joining in this peace force. Almost all women's organizations are moving in that direction and the result is beneficial. It is announced that at the convention of women's institutes opening tomorrow in Nova Scotia, the matter will be stressed and some are insisting that the aims and objects of the League of Nations should be incorporated in the course of studies in all public schools. All this makes for peace and if carried out in every nation will in a few years have a wonderful effect.

The person who is late every morning and fresh every evening usually becomes one of the drones of society.

Success is largely a state of mind. Think success and you have it.

LABOR BEEN TO FORE FOR MANY YEARS

In the movement for peace, Labor has been to the fore for many years. Socialists have pledged themselves not to bear arms against the workers of any other nation. While we know that the pledge failed during the last Great War, yet the feeling is stronger today than it was at that time and it is probable that whenever the time comes, if it does come, that the people are called on to face the foe, they will have to be thoroughly assured that the cause is just before they will agree to take up arms.

However, more important than that is the feeling among labor men generally, especially those of moderate views, who belong to international unions and who are gradually getting to the view now becoming general that war is a crime and only to be justified under most extreme conditions.

Success is not comparing yourself favorably with your competitor. Probably both your competitor and you ought to be ashamed of yourselves.

Beware of the best society. It's pretty easy to get in but most difficult to get out.

NEED OF SIMPLE FLAG DEMONSTRATED

Last Friday there was a flag day held at Acropolis Hill grounds and the young people of the city to the number of about one thousand gathered there. Each carried a Canadian flag but today very few of those youngsters know what was on that flag. In fact ninety-nine out of one hundred Canadians know nothing of the significance of the Canadian arms which is on the flag and do not even care. It is much too complicated. What is needed is some simple emblem that all can understand and remember. The Union Jack is simple but the Canadian flag is not distinctive and not artistic and not intelligible. It is time for a decided change.

There once was a railway official came to town and nobody asked him for anything, but that was a long, long time ago.

Play the game and keep at it for victory is in the offing.

TELLS ABOUT THE MOUNTIES

SIR ARCHIBALD McDONNELL GIVES INTERESTING ADDRESS TO WOMEN'S CANADIAN CLUB

HISTORY OF ORGANIZATION

Famous General Recounts Stories of Work and Influence of Red
Coats

In a pleasant conversational manner, General Sir Archibald Cameron McDONNELL, K.C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., distinguished military man and commander of the First Division in France during the Great War, related many early anecdotes of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police and more briefly experiences of the Boer War and European conflict at a luncheon under the auspices of the Women's Canadian Club in the Boston Hall Saturday afternoon. There was a large gathering of ladies, with many men also in attendance, and Sir Archibald's discourse was listened to with much interest and rapt attention. Specially invited as guests were men who served with the First Division and they turned out in force to renew communication with a leader who was much beloved by them all.

Mrs. G. A. Woodland, president of the Women's Canadian Club, occupied the chair and, in introducing the guest of honor, referred briefly to the distinguished career of Sir Archibald. He had been a commandant of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police in Alberta, officer commanding the Royal Military College at Kingston and had served with distinction in the South African War. Born at Windsor, Ontario, he was a true Canadian and his command of the First Canadian Division in France had been both popular and effective. Besides many honors conferred by his own country, Sir Archibald had been awarded the Legion of Honor and the Croix de Guerre by the French government and it was he who had been responsible for the "red patch," the distinguishing badge of First Division Canadian soldiers. Mrs. Woodland concluded her introduction with the reading of a passage from Sir Archibald's final order at the end of the Great War and also took occasion to welcome men of the First Canadian Division who were in attendance.

Sir Archibald, who was given an ovation on rising to speak, opened his address with humorous passages before launching into his subject of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, now known as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, an organization which had established British law and order from the 49th parallel to the Arctic Ocean and whose officers and men possessed qualities that gave them unique influence over other men. They possessed all the attributes necessary to the effective carrying out of their work—namely, absolute straightforwardness, sympathy, faith and courage.

INCEPTION OF FORCE

The force found its inception, the speaker said, through the necessity of curbing a period of great lawlessness which had arisen in Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territories following Confederation. The Indians had been debauched with liquor by people from the south and murders were frequent. It was realized that British law and order must be established and to that end an armed constabulary was decided upon by Sir John A. Macdonald, then premier, in 1872. The massacre of Cypress Hill brought the project to a head and Col. George A. French was selected as commander and the organization was formed much along the lines of the Royal Irish Constabulary of which Col. French had been a member. Even to this day the force resembled in many ways that famous Old Country police body. Col. James Farquharson McLeod, later commander, was named as second in command. He and Col. French made a great team for the head of a force originally designed to be three hundred strong. Organization was finally effected and in 1874 the "red coat" started their "pathless march" across the prairies. Here the speaker recited a number of interesting anecdotes.

Because they represented the authority of Britain whose word the aborigines had never known to be broken, the Indians from those early days even down to the present had ever been friendly, respectful and even of assistance to the "red coats." A most rigid but still a uniquely cheery discipline was maintained in the force and failure was never accepted. The man who failed was "put through the hoop." Dealing with the Indians was a work that required at once patience and persistence and these qualities were developed to a high degree in the Mounted Police. The Indians to the "red coats" were something like children and over them the force obtained a great hold.

The speaker related many incidents of valor and success on the part of members of the force. Both in the Boer War and the Great War members of the force had risen to the aid of their country and many honors had been obtained by them. The force had furnished some six or seven generals for the Great War and several of its members had obtained the Victoria Cross, the highest award for valor Great Britain had to bestow. One constable, in the four years of the conflict, had risen from the rank of a back rank private to that of lieutenant-colonel in command of a regiment. The speaker told of several war incidents one of these being at Hill 60 where an officer, with two legs shot away with shell fire, had refused to be taken from the trenches until 28 of his wounded men had been removed. "We, in the Mounted Police don't go out of danger in front of our men," he had said.

WONDERFUL ORGANIZATION

"It is a wonderful organization and a wonderful asset to any land," concluded the speaker. "The time has not yet come and I hope it never will when it can be wiped off the slate. Persistence, patience and square treatment are its attributes."

Mrs. G. A. Rix proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the speaker. His address had been very enlightening on a subject which was a matter of pride for every Canadian and it had been much appreciated. The vote was seconded by Miss Norah Rivett and presented to Sir Archibald by Mrs. Woodland amid applause. The luncheon opened with the singing of the Canadian version of "O Canada" and closed with "God Save the King." Mrs. F. P. Kenny playing the piano accompaniments.

NEED OF AIRPORTS IN ALL BIG CITIES BEING EMPHASIZED

(Edmonton Bulletin)

Vancouver papers are now urging that a landing place for airplanes be established in that city. Since Edmonton took the lead a couple of years ago in creating a municipal air port, a number of other Canadian cities have done so, and the prospect is that a couple of years hence every important centre in the Dominion will have a space set aside and properly marked for the accommodation of the overhead "fliers." Canada already leads the world in making use of the airplane for survey work and photography, fire patrol and exploration. An air mail service is to be tried out this summer and commercial transportation is within sight. The Dominion is showing enterprise and vision in adapting the flying machine to the ends of public and private business, and Edmonton has set the pace for the cities in providing terminal facilities.

Dr. J. A. West returned to the city on yesterday's train after spending the week-end at Terrace.

SAFEGUARDING Your Good Times-

"A FEW precious holidays . . . the innate tendency of a limited wardrobe to lose its freshness with amazing quickness . . . a Lux-bath overnight for the sport-skirt, the silk hose, the underthings . . . —perfect safety to all delicate garments—then a satisfying, clean-from-top-to-toe feeling the next day, with none of the embarrassment attendant upon soiled clothes . . . Fortify the week-end bag with LUX!"

[The above letter was written by Mrs. George A. Lyght, Hamilton, Ontario.]

Safety

Thousands of letters are sent us by Canadian women. In all of these, the outstanding feature is safety . . . the fact that Lux will not shrink woollens, will not fade colours, will not endanger any fabric entrusted to a LUX cleansing . . . these are the qualities most appreciated by LUX users.

The cleansing and protective qualities of LUX are not accidental. They result from the scientific preparation of the LUX flakes.

"Do not experiment, madam, use LUX and be sure."
