FISH OIL AND

West Coast of Vancouver Island Proves Productive Section of Province

season, according to official figures received at the Provincial Fisheries Department.

The total output of the nineteen reduction plants operating on the Island coast up to October 8 was 2,792,191 imperial gallons of oil and 12,687 tons of meal, a large gain over the 1926 figures. With pilchards still running strongly at some points, the season's total production will top 3,000,000 gallons of oil and 13,000 tons of meal, it is expected. At this time last year production was much smaller. Altogether 1,823,-375 imperial gallons of oil and 7,992 tons of meal had been produced by the fifteen plants then operating.

SEASON WAS LATE These figures were taken to mean remarkable success this year, although it started extremely late. The hordes of oily little fish came late to the Coast rom their unknown breeding grounds arout in the Pacific and operators of reduction plants feared for a time that hey would not come at all in worthwhile quantities. In August, however, they reached the coast in enormous volume and since that time have been aught freely at most points. Just as fishermen had tied up their boats for DECLARES BISHOP HUGHES he season a new run got under way recently and the fish are still being

In Barkley Sound, where seven reduction plants operate 652,215 imperial gallons of oil and 3.313 tons of meal were produced up to October 8, the official figures show. Last year five plants in the sound produced 494,820 callons of oil and 2,265 tons of meal.

Six plants in the Esperanza, Nootka, and Clayoquot areas produced 1,400,919 gallons of oil and 6,274 tons of meal. as against 1,025,489 gallons and 4,425 ons in 1926.

Plants around Kyoquot and Quatsino turned out 728,970 gallons of oil and 3,400 tons of meal, as compared with 303,066 gallons and 1,302 tons a year

Fishery officials have no doubt that oil production will pass 3,000,000 gallons this year, as against the total production last year of 1,898,721 gallons, while the 7.948 tons of meal produced altogether last year already have been exceeded and may be doubled before the end of the season.
