very silly at their knitting? Their talk consisted only of servants and dress." In these words Richard A. King, the eminent literary critic, who was for 38 years literary editor of Truth, spoke to the "Sketch" of changes seen. "In my lday a woman of 25 was middle-aged. and a woman of 30 could hardly expect to marry. Hypocrisy was the keystone of social life. A woman was ostracised for such grave crimes as dancing with married men or being frivolous. A girl learnt exactly what man considered it best that she should learn-singing, deportment, smirking and flattery. And what a ninny she was! She was as much suppressed as women in harems. In every way the change between your generation and mine is astounding. Where are the little children bought from their parents, chained to the factory looms, and flogged if they fell asleep?

"Veto? And why?" 'Cause when the doctor came he says, 'Well, well, if it ain't another little black bawl."-Washington Unif. Birge.
