Magic Still Commonly Practiced Among Indians of the Interior Says Father Allard in Interview

Missionary Declares it is a Blot Upon Civilization and one That is Being Gradually Rooted out by the Church

FATHER Joseph Allard, O.M.I., missionary to the Indians of Central British Columbia, who is here in connection with the witchcraft case against Chief Billy Williams of Kispiox, a recent convert to the Catholic Church, interviewed yesterday, stated that witch doctors or medicine men were still common among the tribes in the interior. They still made their magic at Hazelton, Kispiox, and many other villages, and so deeply rooted has been the custom for the natives to appeal to them in time of sickness that it has been hard to eradicate it.

When I was at Kispiox on March 6 and last I was about to make Chief Billy Williams' acquaintance, he was given the unanimous call of the judges on a wide margin of points. It was a ten-round return bout between McDonald and Gurvich for the title of middleweight champion of Northern British Columbia and a purse of $400—$240 for the winner and $160 for the loser. Promoter Ralph Smith offered one of the most attractive boxing cards ever presented here and a crowd of over hundred persons was packed into the Exhibition Hall for the occasion—the gate being estimated at something in the neighborhood of $800. There were five lively preliminaries which were worth the price of admission, to say nothing of the main event which, as far as action was concerned, left little to be desired.

Dido Gurvich was very much on his feet right to the end and fought the battle of his life. Though he lost the decision, he had little to be ashamed of. It was a case where experience and more skillful boxing was the day. McDonald merely demonstrated his superiority. The local boy did plenty of attacking but was blocked most of the time. At that, he got the odd one across though his opponent was fairly awarded the majority of the honors.

Petty Officer Instructor Young, R. C. N. V. R. referred all hours and the judges for the main event was Ralph LePine and Jack May who, sitting on opposite sides of the ring, agreed in awarding McDonald seven rounds, Gurvich, one, and two even. After the bout, McDonald, who has become very popular here, was carried out of the ring on the shoulders of his rejoicing admirers.

None Among Indians There are no witches among the Indians but there are magicians pretending to be healers can help the sick. And when they accuse someone of causing harm through magic, it is usually done upon nothing better than pure delusion.

NONE AMONG INDIANS Speaking of magic as distinguished from witchcraft, Father Allard said "a magician is a person endowed with secret knowledge and power." In a restricted sense he said it was understood such practices entered into a compact to be an interference with the usual course of physical nature by apparently taking the shape of a parody inadequate means, such as recitation of the mass or the offices of the Church, formulas, gestures, mixtures of incongruous elements and other mysterious darkness and in return received from him preternatural powers such as riding through the air upon a broomstick, with the force underlying the universe, assuming different shapes at will and tormenting their chosen victims."

MAGIC The belief in magic, as distinguished from witchcraft, Father Allard said "a magician is a person endowed with secret knowledge and power." In a restricted sense he said it was understood such practices entered into a compact to be an interference with the usual course of physical nature by apparently taking the shape of a parody inadequate means, such as recitation of the mass or the offices of the Church, formulas, gestures, mixtures of incongruous elements and other mysterious darkness and in return received from him preternatural powers such as riding through the air upon a broomstick, with the force underlying the universe, assuming different shapes at will and tormenting their chosen victims."

TRADITIONAL BELIEF In the traditional belief, not only of the dark ages but of post reformation times, the witch or wizard addicted to such practices entered into a compact to be an interference with the usual course of physical nature by apparently taking the shape of a parody inadequate means, such as recitation of the mass or the offices of the Church, formulas, gestures, mixtures of incongruous elements and other mysterious darkness and in return received from him preternatural powers such as riding through the air upon a broomstick, with the force underlying the universe, assuming different shapes at will and tormenting their chosen victims."

The belief in witchcraft and its practice seems to have existed among all primitive peoples. An exaggerated estimate of the evil has led many thousands of its followers to be punished by death mostly at the hands of the state in different countries of Europe. The last death punishment for witchcraft was inflicted on a girl in Switzerland in the canton of Glarus in 1783.

The question of the reality of witchcraft is one upon which it is not easy to pass a confident judgment. In the face of Holy Scriptures and the teaching of the Fathers and theologians, the abstract possibility of a pact with the Devil and of a diabolical interference with human affairs can hardly be denied. Outskilled and outgeneraled by his Vancouver opponent, Battling Dido Gurvich of Prince Rupert met his Waterloo like a man last night at the hands of Jimmy McDonald of Vancouver who was given the unanimous call of the judges on a wide margin of points. It was a ten-round return bout between McDonald and Gurvich for the title of middleweight champion of Northern British Columbia and a purse of $400—$240 for the winner and $160 for the loser. Promoter Ralph Smith offered one of the most attractive boxing cards ever presented here and a crowd of over hundred persons was packed into the Exhibition Hall for the occasion—the gate being estimated at something in the neighborhood of $800. There were five lively preliminaries which were worth the price of admission, to say nothing of the main event which, as far as action was concerned, left little to be desired.

Dido Gurvich was very much on his feet right to the end and fought the battle of his life. Though he lost the decision, he had little to be ashamed of. It was a case where experience and more skillful boxing was the day. McDonald merely demonstrated his superiority. The local boy did plenty of attacking but was blocked most of the time. At that, he got the odd one across though his opponent was fairly awarded the majority of the honors.

TENTH ROUND—Dido realized that his only salvation now was the chance of a knock-out. But McDonald was wise and waited out the vicious rushes. Then he landed and Dido holding on. Dido was plunging blindly and taking them all. His rushes had little effect on McDonald who took the round without dispute.

The judges were consulted and the result announced.

PRELIMINARIES

The first preliminary was a smart three-two-minute sparring exhibition between Tod Morgan and Howard Keefe. It was little Keefe's first experience in the ring and he made a creditable showing. Both boys were willing and Morgan forced the mixing. The referee adjudged it a draw and a shower of silver rewarded the boys' efforts.

Battling Rudolph Nelson and Cyclone Eddie Smith mixed with a will. Nelson was one of the toughest little opponents Smith has had. They both landed hard ones and Smith hit the floor twice in the first round. Smith did the most of the leading and fighting in the second round. Nelson showing clever elusiveness in both this and the third round. Smith was given a doubtful decision.

Fred Boulter and Curly Donald provided the crowd with some fun. There was great deal of open fighting. Donald having lots of heart and looking courageous enough. Donald received some hard jolts in the second round and was knocked down twice. He was a wild looking man with a bloody nose and a wicked gleaming eye. Boulter had all the best of the third round and only ducking and holding on saved Donald from going out. The decision was clearly enough for Boulter.

George Bard clearly demonstrated his superiority over Jack Holroyd. There were some lively exchanges in the first round and in the second round with Bard all to the good. Holroyd was a sorry looking object when they threw in the towel from his corner in the third round. Holroyd was down once and twice for the count of four. He weakly got up only to meet more staggering rights. Holroyd was bloody, staggering, and just hanging to the ropes when they called it off.

In the semi-wind-up, Benny Wendle, who is looking better all the time, gave George Boulter all he wanted. There was vigorous mixing in the first round. In the second, Wendle attacked hard and had Boulter down for the count of six. The pace was tiring on them both and Wendle was unable to finish it.

They were both tired to start the third round. Boulter was nevertheless coming to life. Wendle had saved something up for the fourth and final round. He landed with vigor and Boulter, his face a mass of blood, was almost out again when the final gong sounded. Wendle was given a well-earned decision.

Max Heilbronner was time-keeper for the evening while Harry Pickering kept count of the knockdowns.
