Mayor Taylor Den'es He Attempted to Block Appointment of Commission to Investigate Vancouver Conditions

ANCOUVER, April 5.- Denying emphatically that he had ever attempted to block the appointment of a Royal Commission to investigate conditions in the police force, Mayor Taylor, at the police commission meeting today, said he had twice discussed the question with the attorney general and premier. The mayor said:

"Whatever evidence the commissioner Fletcher may have in his posesssion has never yet been disclosed to his fellow commissioners and until I am made aware of the evidence it would be both idle and futile for me to express an opinion thereon."

Mr. Fletcher is probably aware that a Royal Commission is an expensive proceeding and before subjecting the ratepayers to the expense, evidence which it is proposed to present should b submitted or at least be known to the commissioners and should be submitted or at least be known to the commissioners and should be examined by the city prosecutor and city solicitor.
