WOMAN HUMAN DECLARES SHAW

FAMOUS AUTHOR SAYS PEOPLE STILL LOOK ON HER AS SEPARATE CREATION

LONDON, Jan. 3.—(Canadian Press) George Bernard Shaw proclaimed himself a relic of the Victorian age when he appeared on a platform recently to assist in an appeal for providing hostels for homeless women. At the outset, after some by-play with the chairman, Sir Gerald du Maurier Mr. Shaw promised that if the audience would subscribe £2,000 he would make it into guineas. The £2,000 was quickly forthcoming, and as quickly was converted into guineas, a difference of about $500.

Mr. Shaw told about the shock he had received as a child of five, when accustomed to seeing women wearing crinolines and looking like mountains surrounded by pinched figures, he saw one for the first time wearing a skirt without a crinoline. "It gave the impression," he said, "that she had legs." The men of that day did not admire the appearance of men, but they were determined to regard women as beings of another race. Women were to be angels. They were to wear clothes that concealed their shape. They were not dressed; they were upholstered, and if they were not studded with buttons like upholstered furniture they had lots of little trimmings that conveyed the same effect.

"The last woman I remember seeing who appeared to be upholstered," said Mr. Shaw, "was Miss Marie Corelli. I look round this audience and I see no woman who has that appearance."

"But while fashions have changed, the Victorian idea that woman is a separate creation still exists. My secret as a dramatic author, the secret of that extraordinary knowledge of women which enchants the whole world, is that I have always assumed that woman is a human being very much like myself. It is due very largely to the Victorian idea that we have the extraordinary state of society which neglects to provide for women what is provided for men as a matter of course."

ODD CORRUPTIONS OF COMMON WORDS USED BY EVERYONE DAILY

Many words and expressions used every day have in reality, according to The Mentor, an origin quite foreign to the one implied and frequently quite inconsistent with the meaning that custom has attached to them.

A "country dance," for instance, is not merely a celebration of rustics. It comes from the French contre danse, meaning any dance in which the performers face each other.

A "blackguard," now a highly complimentary term, was not always meant as such. A black guard, in the days of the Tudors, was merely an inferior servant of the crown, who was dressed in black.

The word "idiot" has become completely corrupted. The word had its origin in Greece, where it was applied to a private person—one not engaged in any public office. It did not even signify that he was particularly incompetent to officiate, but merely distinguished an ordinary citizen from priests and officials. In time, however, the impression was gathered that an "idiot" was not competent and in time degenerated into its present meaning.

The noble title of "Lord" had a comparatively humble origin in "loaf ward," meaning guardian of the food, and hence, head of the household. "Lady," likewise, had its root in blaf lige, or "bread kneader," meaning simply the female head of the family. "Spinster" is applied to an unmarried woman because in the good old days no young woman was considered fit to be a wife until she had spun for herself a set of linens.

A Jew's harp has no Hebrew origin. It gets its name from the French word jou, meaning a toy.

Macaroni, delectable dish, was originated in Italy by the cook of a wealthy noble of Palermo. The cook knew his art but lacked imagination—and consequently his chef d'oeuvre lacked a name. His master was an epicure and with the first taste he exclaimed "Ma Carri!" which quite freely translated might mean "How perfectly delicious!" Upon the second taste his enthusiasm increased to the extent of "Ma Caroni!" And the delighted cook forthwith named his invention by this endearing term.

A. W. Edge, who has been at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Brooks-bank, Third Avenue West, for several weeks, will re-enter the Prince Rupert General Hospital today.

R. H. Eaton, superintendent of the Babine Lake hatchery, arrived on the Princess Mary Saturday afternoon from Vancouver where he spent a holiday and will proceed to the interior on tomorrow morning's train.
