Intense Activity in Preparation for Halibut Season - Halibut Boat Sold-Clam Cannery on Dundas Islands

It can now be reported that preparations locally for the reopening of the halibut season, little more than two weeks hence, have reached a point of much intensity. With overhaul work on boats and engines proceeding merrily, members of the various crews are engaged with vim in the essential and skillful occupation of gear rigging and, on all hands, there is much hustle and bustle which is welcome enough following a winter of general and unprecedented quiet at the port. The present busy air will continue on even a more energetic scale during the coming fortnight at the expiry of which time most everybody should be ready *- to "take off" on the initial trips of the season. While most of the boats will, now traded in this vessel to the Suga as usual, set out from here, there will shipyard for a 28-foot trolling boat be a few go north the week before the powered with a Ford marine engine and opening to start from the closer Alaskan ports to the westward banks.
