A WONDERFUL FLIGHT

The flight of Bert Hinckler from England to Australia broke setting for the ceremony. a number of records and indicates the possibilities of air navigation. The great thing about it was that it was made alone in a light machine with folding wings enabling it to be easily handled, stored in a garage and not subject to being blown away by sud- nursing staff who came in a body and den squalls. The flyer announced that he had not the slightest help from anyone in moving the machine. Considering the number of stops en route at strange places many of them in out-of-way parts upon the arm of her father by whom of the world, the feat is one that is distinctly a world leader.

BOOM FOR STEWART

Stewart seems to be in for a boom. The building of the short line railway which is to be started very soon, the bonding of a number of mines by operating companies and the general interest taken in mining there over and above former seasons, makes it pretty Miss Lois McRae, who were a pretty certain that the Portland Canal centre will have the biggest flurry frock of beige georgette with hat to it has so far seen. Property values will advance in price and land match, her bouquet being of carnations speculation will be added to the mining speculation which has all and fern. On the other hand, it must not be forgotten that attached bride's parents where a reception was to the railway is a veritable empire of valuable lands.

A deal with the Canadian National would probably be more satisfactory to the people of British Columbia, in the long run, than a deal with any other corporation, though a bargain with the Canadian Pacific might be very attractive, too. The Canadian National has interests in at least a portion of the country which the P.G.E. aims to serve, and would not like to have a rival come in there. It other adornments. Looking at the question from the other side, there is no doubt, the house formerly occupied by Mr. the Canadian National as the heir and successor of the Grand and Mrs. Alonzo Haines. Trunk Pacific inherited certain moral if not legal obligations toward British Columbia. The P.G.E. was undertaken with the understanding that it should have the carrying of through traffic from the Grand Trunk Pacific to Vancouver. It was to be, in effect, a branch of the G.T.P. But when the Dominion government took over the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific, it found a z railroad down the Thompson Valley and into Vancouver which served its purpose. It did not need the P.G.E. to give it entry into Vancouver. So the people of British Columbia were left with the load
