MAN OF STEEL KEPT HIS WORD

Joseph Stalin Now Almost a Dictator in Russia and Opponents in Exile

(Victoria Times)

If political observers in Europe thought Joseph Stalin, "Russia's Man of Steel," was bluffing when he declared that he would not put up with the oppositionist tactics of Mr. Thotzky and his colleagues, they have had to revise their opinions recently. Mr. Stalin has kept his word and seems to have done a complete job. Trotzky, Rakovsky, and Radek, described as nonpenitents, have been sent to remote regions to fill unimportant positions. Kameneff and Zinovieff, having declared themselves before the entire party as erring in their views and tactics, have been dealt with a little more leniently. As penitents they will fill state executive departments in Central Russia until their rights shall be restored. But the group of incorrigibles headed by Sapronoff, former secretary of the Central Executive Committee, will have to cool their heels in the remotest regions of Siberia for some time to come.

In a recent article in The London Sunday Times, F. A. MacKenzie, an eminent Canadian journalist and author who has spent many years in Europe and has made a particular study of Russian developments since the revolution, paints an interesting verbal picture of this man who has brushed aside all these shining lights of Communism "apparently without a qualm." He points out that until four years ago Stalin was little more than a name even to the rank and file of his own party. His signature invariably was found at the end of documents, and "while the peasant was as familiar with Trotzky's portrait as he was with the face of the ikon, "Stalin was not even a name to him. Nor did he push himself forward in any way. When Trotzky was receiving the salute of 30,000 soldiers and the plaudits of tens of thousands of people in the Red Square, "Stalin would stand back, unrecognized save by a few, in the semi-uniform dress of the Communist workingman." But he gradually grew in strength and during Lenin's last illness, Mr. MacKenzie tells us, his fight for supreme power began.

Mr. MacKenzie explains that Stalin set out to obtain control of the local "nests" of the Communist party. Reports of the disloyalty of local leaders were brought to him regularly and they were quickly replaced by his own nominees. Gradually some of the strongest elements revolted at this bureaucratic control. Trotzky led the rebellion and Stalin took up the gage. He is now almost a dictator and Trotzky is on his way to virtual exile. Mr. MacKenzie finds that Stalin, whom he describes as "strong, virile, still under fifty," is "molding the new Russia to his will."

CANADA AS A PACIFIC POWER

(Edmonton Journal)

Some of the eastern papers have commented upon Mr. Amery's reference in recent addresses to Canada as "a Pacific power," which has seemed to them a novel and arresting idea. It was natural, that, having come to Canada by the Pacific route, Mr. Amery should be impressed with it and with the fact that the development of dominion affairs is sure to be closely connected with the great western ocean. Whether he was thinking in terms of naval or mercantile power does not greatly matter: his judgment holds true in either case.

Here in the west the importance of Canada's Pacific position is naturally more generally recognized than in the east. We are already trading to a considerable and yearly increasing extent over the western route, and all the signs are that we have only well begun. Canadian power on the Pacific, as the west now looks at it, is and will be mainly in a business way or in whatever advantage may accrue from close contacts with the Orient; but there is, of course, the possibility of disadvantage also, and frontage on the Pacific involves responsibilities that cannot be overlooked or avoided.

That Canada is itself realizing its destiny in this direction more fully is indicated by such facts as the proposal to appoint a minister to Japan. If and when such an appointment is made, Alberta, of all the provinces, will have reason to be interested, for Alberta-Japanese relations in a business way have already been established and are certain to grow—the more certainly if promoted by active and sympathetic embassage at Tokio

NOTHING CONTENTIOUS TO COME UP AT OTTAWA

That is Opinion of Labor Member for Winnipeg Expressed in Speech

WINNIPEG, Jan. 25.—J. S. Woodsworth, M.P., was the speaker at the Independent Labor party forum in Columbus hall, dealing with some of the question which would be brought up before the Federal house during the next session.

Mr. Woodworth stated that the Labor party was in a somewhat different position to both the old parties, in that the representatives at Ottawa always made an effort to keep in touch with the people, and with this in mind such meeting as the present one were held, when the various questions were discussed, a report made by the representative as to his procedure during the past sessions and suggestions made for his guidance when he again went to Ottawa.

So far as could be learned, Mr. Woodsworth said, the government had no very radical or even contentious legislation in mind. The St. Lawrence waterway scheme appeared to be coming to a head. Behind the rival groups of promotors there lay the question as to whether the problem would be settled on a narrow nationalistic basis, or in view of continental economic developments. Behind this again was the still more important problem as to the public or private ownership of our waterpowers and other natural resources, he said. He referred to the White Mud Falls and stated that Manitoba should own her own natural resources, but what was more important, what was to be done with them. He thought the progressive government of Manitoba should at least go as far in hydro development as the government of Ontario.

PRISONS FOR SALE IN GREAT BRITAIN

More Than Twenty Can be Bought Today Owing to Lack of Prisoners

LONDON, Jan. 25.—The most remarkable testimony to the steady diminution of crime in Great Britain is afforded by the fact that since the war nearly one-half of the prisons in the country have been closed down owing to the great decrease in the prison population. At the present time more than twenty of these disused gaols are for sale, and can be bought cheap. The prison at Stornoway in the Hebrides was recently sold for $20, and County Down Gaol at Downpatrick sold not long ago for $100. Knutsford prison in Cheshire is being converted into two-roomed flats, while Newcastle prison and Carlisle prison have each been purchased by local authorities for municipal purposes. Brecon prison, situated amid beautiful scenery in the mountain fastnesses of Wales, with a trout stream near by, still awaits a purchaser. It was put up for auction some time ago, but the highest bid was under $4500.

SNAKE CAME FORTH WITH BRIGHT EYES SAYS ADVERTISEMENT

A San Francisco paper publishes the advertising of a Chinese "healer." The copy abounds with testimonials. In one of these testimonials a woman declares that she has been cured of "Tumor and Swollen Stomach." After taking the herbs two months, "a snake came out. It had two bright eyes and jumped around like a mad dog. I killed it with a hammer."

If this kind of advertising pays in this supposedly enlightened age, we have been flattering ourselves concerning the state of our collective intelligence. If published statements of this kind really produced business, the number of morons must far exceed the highest estimate of the worst pessimist.

Are the billions we are paying out for education every year really well spent?—February Sunset.
