STALIN IS RULER

With powers greater than those of most monarchs, Joseph V. Stalin, head of the Russian Soviet Government, rules Russia with a from Prince Rupert whereas Skeena may be entirely wrong—that if the training preparatory to going overseas. rod of iron and woe to the man who crosses his path. Only last week, Leon Trotsky, former minister of war, was banished from the the only logical route. country along with several other extremists.

Stalin is a stern ruler but not an extreme communist. He believes that under present conditions the country can go so far and no farther. He admits the failure of military communism and is developing an economic policy that allows freedom for commerce, the place was sending delegates and he in- all lose. right of inheritance, and a partial revival of capitalism. The fate of Trotsky emphasizes the fact that there is no gratitude in politics and that a democracy always eventually tramples on its idols and crucifies its saviors.

One of the secrets of Stalin's power is that he is of a retiring | C. H. Orme moved that the matter disposition. The man's real name is not Stalin. It is simply one of the many aliases under which he went when a fugitive from justice before the revolution. His real name is Joseph Vissarionavich Dzugashvili. Newspapermen and readers of newspapers are glad he changed his name. It would have been difficult to have made a hero of a man with such a name as that with which he was born.

PUNCTUATION IS DIFFICULT

Punctuation is difficult, just as difficult as capitalization. Hardly any two people punctuate alike. The modern rule with capitalization and punctuation is to evade it as much as possible. Just enough punctuation marks are used to make sure that the reader understands what is written. Here is a little clipping that deals with the various marks in an interesting manner:

Punctuation marks have personality. The period is imperative. It stays "Stop here!" The comma is a free and easy little chap. He says, "Slow up a bit, get your breath, and then trot along." The colon calls, "Oh, look what's coming-get ready." Quotation marks give notice that the writer is letting someone else do the talking for a while. Parentheses mark the sidepaths when we leave the main line for a detour. Apostrophes flash the message, "We're skipping spoke briefly assuring the gathering he something." The hyphen is a notice of partnership; sort of a typographical wedding ring."

GRAIN BUSINESS DISAPPOINTING

The grain business through Prince Rupert this year is disappointing. It was announced early in the season that big shipments new members. were planned but the plans have not matured. So far the amount of grain handled is just about the same as last year. The result of to some of the needs of the place. One tying up the elevator in the hands of the Wheat Pool seems rather doubtful under these conditions. It is to be hoped that better results will be obtained before the season end.s

"The P.G.E., with its line to Prince

George, and the Canadian National, with its line to Red Pass, are in competition with each other for the traffic of the Peace River. If the Canadian vegan, they would no doubt build a coast outlet to tap their main line at some point east of Prince George, as close as possible to Red Pass Junction. If they do this, they will leave British Columbia taxpayers (including the taxpayers of Prince Rupert) with their $60,-000,000 P.G.E. sitting up in the air, and they will probably leave the City of Prince Rupert sitting exactly where it is, so far as route and any of their freight
