Harry Ward returned to port cruise down the coast as far as Buccaneer Bay, about 30 miles north of Vancouver, with a federal government geologist on the power cruiser Bonanza. The nose of the Bonanza was poked into many nooks and crannies along the coast and Harry estimates that he covered about 1600 miles in the month he was away. They averaged about eight hours' running a day, travelling as much as 14 hours in a single day. The mining engineer left the Bonanza at the southern end of the trip and Harry was accompanied on the cruise home by his aunt Mrs. Harold Corke of Victoria who is now paying a visit

Capt. J. R. (Scotty) Reid is again the first of the Prince Ru-1 pert halibut fleet to tie up for the winter, discontiuning operations for the season after the trip ending Monday of this week. It will be a few weeks yet before other smaller vessels of the Prince Rupert fleet begin to tie up generally for the winter.

During this week, a good run of coho salmon was reported in the Skeena River, 50 or 60 boats still operating meeting with good success. Most of their fish was disposed of to the Canadian Fish & Cold Storage Co. and other Prince Rupert buyers. The week marked the closing down of Inverness and Humpback Bay canneries, the last of the Skeena River canneries to operate this season.
