A NEW FROCK

Here is shown an early spring frock pattern in individualistic style. Note the side jabot with flower brooch. Skirt is in tiers and accordinian pleated, with girdle drape. Both jabot and girdle drape are lace trimmed. Skirt is uneven hemmed while the modish handkerchief collar is used. In prints, satin, georgette, crepe Roman or knitted fabric this pattern is most effective.

The Semi-Sports Influence in Evening Wear

Informal evening clothes are displaying touches borrowed from the sports mode—and to advantage.

Here is a charming little costume that features the semi-tailored bow. The frock is sleeveless, of yellow chiffon, with two flare tiers. The cardigan jacket is also of chiffon, in canary yellow, with giant brown dots. Worn with a brown hat and brown slippers.

A TWEED COAT FOR SPRING—DAYS THAT ASSURES NEW IMPORTANCE

An important arrival in the spring mode is the tailored tweed coat with scarf and lining to match in a contrasting silk crepe.

Here is one—of fine imported mixture in gray and blue, worn with a scarf and lining of slate blue silk crepe. The collar is flat, to show the scarf to good advantage. Under this type of coat is worn a simple sports dress, throat, preferably in some vivid shade.

The Smart Dress Coat Adopts Galyak

White galyak, that soft, flat fur so pretty in light shades, is being used on almost every smart spring coat. One of its chief virtues is its pliability, which enables you to drape it as easily as cloth.

Here it is as the scarf collar of an attractive black cloth coat with a bow flare at the hem. The collar can be arranged in any way you wish—either close to the throat, in stock fashion, or hanging loosely.

A PRINTED ENSEMBLE

Here is an ensemble, gay vivid and colorful. In fact, the printed ensemble is the rage this season. And for color, and vivaciousness, there is nothing more coming. These are developed in the fine silk prints in both conservative and earnest lines. Each piece may be worn separately if desired and both short and long coats are seen.

NEW STYLES SEEN IN THE CHURCH PARADE YESTERDAY

Easter Sunday has for long been the signal for the appearance of the new spring outfits and yesterday was no exception to the rule. All the new styles as seen above were noted yesterday.

Match Your Accessories to the Ensemble

This charming suit of brown kashmir and beige jersey in large checked design running diagonally, is very smart. The jumper has a crew neck with a smart set-on V-shaped. The skirt has a circular front panel that hangs a tiny bit lower than the hem.

Since checked bags may now be seen in almost any fabric from gingham to jersey, the lady in the sketch had no difficulty matching her bag to her blouse. Her hat is one of the new, off-the-face, globe-like models.

The Princess Line Takes Spring Coats

The first day's news cable back by delighted buyers from Paris, at the time of the opening was to the effect that princess lines were being adapted for coats. This is welcome news for the tall, slender woman who can afford the molded princess with its flaring hem.

The model shown here is green kasha with geometric cuttings. Note the longer line back and the way in which the coat clings to the figure. There is a small collar of gray squirrel
