Steamer San Juan Collided With Tanker Dodd About Midnight

At 11:55 last night the Digby Island wireless station picked up an "SOS" message from the American steamer BIG TORONTO San Juan stating she was sinking 55 miles south of San Francisco.

Further word received by the station was to the effect that the San Juan had collided with the steamer S. C. T. Two Dodd, the former vessel sinking almost immediately. The Dodd immediately hove to and picked up as many of the passengers and crew of the San Juan as possible. It was feared, however, that there would be serious loss of life.

Latest word received was that the Dodd was proceeding to port with seriously injured persons from the San Juan. The steamer Munami had come up to the scene of the wreck and was standing by to pick up further survivors from the water.

The "SOS" from the San Juan was also picked up last night by the steamer Prince George, which arrived in port including two women, leaped in- + take up his new duties. He mentioned that the Labor Government in England was a most interesting development and one that would have been considered fantastic twenty years ago. It was an illustration, of the genius of the English for of government which he thought Results Are Fatal to Many was best for them.

England had not depended on a ruling class for many years. One had developed in the seventeenth century, but it had gradually been superceded with the transfer of power from the landowners to the industrial interests.
