PRINCE RUPERT'S FUTURE
To the Editor:—
There appears to be a number of persons in every community whose vision of advancement is bounded by their own particular environment. When located in a city their sole aim is to advance along the lines of least resistance without considering that the encouragement of others will bring prosperity all round.
It is not often that a man is fated to see every town and city in a country spring up from a forest to what British Columbia is today. If the experience of sixty years in British Columbia is any criterion, there is much for the residents of Prince Rupert to do, in order to become a business centre, like the cities of Vancouver, Victoria, New Westminster and Nanaimo.

Should Grow.
With the advantage of a trans-continental railway and located on the shores of a beautiful harbor, it is the general opinion of outsiders that Prince Rupert is tributary to Vancouver, where the shipping of the outer world now loads and unloads from almost every port in the world. With a railway crossing the continent, nearer the Orient by many hundreds of miles, the largest city in the North, with mines and farming land in close proximity, Prince Rupert should grow, as Vancouver did, after the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Not Advertised.
The difficulty appears to be that Prince Rupert is not advertised as it should be. Vancouver and Victoria miss no opportunities to capture everything in sight. The rivalry in business is an incentive which is not felt by those at the northern terminus of a great railway, who appear content to jog along, allowing Vancouver to cater to the outlying towns wherever steamboat communication can be utilized for the conveyance of passengers and freight. There is no communication with Japan, although we have the most direct route, with the saving of days in crossing the ocean. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway has the best roadbed with a saving in time and freight between the Pacific and eastern Canada.

The days, weeks and months pass without any great effort to induce shipowners to use the route that means profit to them and prosperity to us. Vancouver sends out hundreds of travellers whose business is to obtain and hold the trade of outside settlements and towns. The coast cities are united in a great advertising scheme to attract visitors and trade. Conventions are held through which much advertising is done. When they have a grievance to air, delegations proceed to Ottawa and Victoria to lay before the governments the wants of the electors.

No opportunity for advancement of the cities to the south is overlooked. Passengers and freight are carried from one port to another at the lowest possible rates. One city "nailed the Capital to its mast" by the erection of palatial parliament buildings. The other being on the mainland of the province became the centre of trade and commerce, branching out in all directions and keeping in touch with every large and small business firm wherever located. Whilst we are haggling over the transfer of our means of communication the greatest corporation in Canada is carrying on business on land and sea without a hitch in the problem of ways and means to continue a fast and capable service.

If Prince Rupert desires to obtain the recognition so urgently needed to build up a great and lasting city, every resident must become interested in advertising the advantages not only of Prince Rupert, but of the immediate neighborhood. We have more natural wealth in this great northern country than any other portion of the province if not of the Dominion. Our mines, fisheries, farming land, timber and other natural resources are, practically undeveloped. The opportunity for interesting the capital of Europeans is before us. Many thousands of people with capital to invest are weary of the unrest in Europe and are looking for opportunities such as we have to offer in this vast and almost unknown land.

"NEMO."
There will be a meeting of the Board of Hospital Directors in the city hall this evening at 8 o'clock.
