The Challenge

Moffett twisted his lips into an ugly sneer and looked in the other direction. Dale glanced out of the window and saw a man with a small black bag crossing the lawn. He went to the door and directed the physician to the room where Paul Ainsworth was. Then he went back and resumed his search of Dr. Moffett's bag. Most of the remaining articles were of little interest, but a murmur of admiration escaped him as he drew out a rope of pearls. He held them at arm's length and inspected them in the light of the ropes.

"Gorgeous!" he said softly. And then his lips twisted into a comical smile. "They are the same ones, of course. It was very clearly arranged, Moffett. And it was one of the finest compliments I have ever received. You wouldn't have gone to such lengths unless you had been very much afraid of me."

"I was," Moffett grumbled, and there was a glint of genuine admiration in the hateful gaze he fixed on

"I think I understand Summers was searching the house. You placed lers. the pearls in the aperture in the wainscoting, knowing he would find them there. Then, very deftly, you worked his mind around to the the idea that they had been left there by the murderer and that the murderer would come back for them. So you and Summers went to work and baited the trap. You were in no danger of losing your pearls, watched. But tell me this, Moffett. you get them, Moffett?" The trap was set for me, of course, but how did you know I was going to walk into it?"

"You did," said Moffett with shrug.

"But how did you know?" Dale insisted.

Moffett grinned insolently. "Remember the talk we had in the library of my house? You came there to inquire for Dr. Moffett." chuckled contemptuously. "I knew then that you were the Picaroon, but I didn't let on that I knew."

"And how did you know?" "I had known it for a month." There was a trace of malicious glee in the doctor's voice. "You visited my house one night—in your role of stepped up to Dale. the Picaroon, of course. You didn't and so you went away, thinking that your visit had passed unnoticed. It hadn't though. That night you were followed to your residence. A simple gether made it evident that Martin Dale was the Picaroon."

The doctor merely gave him malevolent glance.

"There's one thing you can tell me without incriminating yourself,' Dale suggested. "It's worrying me a lot. Has Ainsworth ever seen you face to face?"

Moffett continued to glare and said nothing.

"I owe that chap a humble apology," Dale murmured. "Can't get the hang of it even now, but I certainly got things twisted. You can generally trust a woman's instincts. Moffett. They're more reliable than our most brilliant deductions. Ah.
