Tolstoy Says He Thinks Herds Are Increasing in

WINNIPEG, Man., Jan. 7. -Fires and the slow creeping in of civilization are responsible for the changes in the habits of the immense herds of caribou that roam the barren lands, according to Count Llia Tolstey, grandson of the great philanthropist and writer, who left Winnipeg over the Canadian National Railways this morning for Timagani, where he will make a short stay before returning to New York after nearly five months in the wilderness of the Northwest Territories.

Count Tolstoy was in charge of the expedition sponsored by the American Museum of Natural History to study the migration of the caribou. made more changes in their habits vet. in the past three years than they have done for a century, Count Tolstoy said. Some scientists and old-timers were of the opinion that the herds were decreasing, but he believed that they were increasing. but were moving further away in their great sweeping circles. On this trip he saws herds numbering thousands of heads, but the big herd did not come within the ken of the explorers.

Count Tolstoy strongly advocates the use of aeroplanes for the study of caribou migration.

The party left Winnipeg for the north on August 14 and went from Sturgeon Landing, a thousand miles by water, as far as Reindeer Neultin and Windy Lakes. Ninety-seven portages were necessary. The return was made with dogs bought from the Eskimo. "Wonderful animals, these Eskimo dogs," said Tolstoy.
