

Mrs. HALL SENDS THIS WHITE SAUCE

It is a splendid sauce and quite easy to make.

Take 2 level tablespoons of flour, 2 level tablespoons butter, 1/2 cup Pacific Milk, 1/2 cup of water in which the fish was boiled.

Salt and pepper to taste and add a chopped hard boiled egg or chopped parsley.

Mrs. Hall sends this because she says it turns out so well when she uses Pacific Milk.

Others will be as grateful as we are to have this recipe.

LOCAL WHALE AND VISITORS

Reporter Tells Pretty Story of Trip of Vancouver's Business Men Coming North.

Only one calamity has marred the smooth and even tenor of the trip of a half hundred Vancouver business men to northern B. C., says the Vancouver Sun's special correspondent. The pet whale, so dearly beloved by Mr. Banfield, has disappeared into the deep and chilly waters far below the ship and is lost. What has happened to it or why it was so mortally offended, cannot be known now, but its loss cast a temporary gloom over the party.

This whale, Mr. Banfield told a solemn gathering on the deck of the Prince Rupert, was wont to appear alongside the speedy little ship with the first touch of dawn that crept over the hills. In the morning it would come up like a Hun submarine, the water pouring off its broad back, and then, after spouting two or three times, it would eye the ship with a friendly look, and keep pace for several miles, flipping its tail in answer to the shouts of greeting from those whom it knew to be friendly, because they also came up at dawn.

"But," said Chris Spencer, "why did you not call us up so that we could see this whale also, Mr. Banfield? The only evidence we have of its existence is the snapshot you were showing us."

Mr. Banfield gazed sadly out towards the endless chain of mountains.

"Well, you see, I knew he was rather shy with strangers, and I wanted to keep him alongside until we got to Rupert. Here is the last picture I ever took of the poor old boy."

It was a snapshot of a huge whale, blowing a spout of water about 50 feet into the air, and staring with benevolent eye towards the camera.

"A beauty," murmured Mr. Cottrell.

"I should like to have seen him," said Mr. Paige.

"There you are," said John Nelson, triumphantly, to J. F. Malkin. "Look at the size of that fellow and how healthy he is. Look at the clear keen eye and the ruddy smooth skin. He lives in the water and never drank anything else in his lifetime. There's an argument for prohibition."

Mr. Malkin nodded, but several others standing around looked unconvinced.

"It never did anybody any good," remarked Ald. Macrae.

"What never did—water?" inquired another.

Before the alderman could answer, there was a terrific cry from the after deck.

"A whale on the port bow."

With a bound Ald. Shelly, E. J. Coyle and E. A. Paige sprang to the port rail. The ship instantly listed badly to port, and the three doughty members of the party were hastily pulled back to the centre of the deck.

"Just in time, too," said Capt. Nicholson, as the ship righted herself.

But the whale had gone again, disappeared completely this time and since then no sight or sound has relieved the tedium of the watching passengers intent upon seeing a whale, nor gladdened the eyes of the mammal's friends in the party. Probably this time he has gone back, never again to appear as the ruddy dawn spreads over the surrounding hills.
