Mr. Shenton was not advocating any revolutionary measures. He urged that changes be brought about constitutionally. People should educate themselves to understand and to proceed in a constitutional way. What they wanted was accessibility to the raw ma- Phone Red 399 terial and tools of production. He had faith in Prince Rupert and in the labor cause. He was sure in the end justice, equality, fraternity and love would triumph.

Rev. A. Wilson

Rev. A. Wilson dealt with the labor question from a different angle. Third Avenue He gave a rather long and very interesting address in which he proposed a toast to the labor forces of RADIO Prince Rupert. He told that he had served five years apprenticeship to FURNITURE REPAIRS, PACKING a trade and then seven years learning his present profession. He suggested that the labor movement stood for much the same as the religion of Jesus Christ. Many of the labor leaders had started their public careers as local preachers. They would never get the full force of labor without religion.

Mr. Wilson then dealt with the question of temperance. He said many had learned a lesson at Winnipeg a few years ago. They had made up their minds to study and keep clear brains. Labor men needed clear brains. The workingmen of the old country were waking up

The speaker mentioned the need of hard work. The members of the present British cabinet were those who had no eight-hour day. They had worked sixteen and twenty hours to fit themselves for their present positions. He urged the men there to be an inspiration to the boys. Today in Canada every opportunity was open to the boys and girls who wished to succeed.

S. D. Macdonald

Replying to the toast to the labor movement, S. D. Macdonald, president of the Trades & Labor Council, traced the history of the local labor movement. It was away back in 1910 when the first committee had approached the city council in re- IT'S THE QUALITY THAT COUNTS gard to wages and union labor and the Oriental question. Then, in 1912 the Trades & Labor Council was formed and did good work. He G. M. HUNT mentioned the O.B.U. movement which many had joined, and of the final identification of the council with the Labor Congress of Canada. Congress met parliament each year and put before them labor questions, and it was particularly noted that British Columbia had the most advanced social legislation of any portion of Canada. This legislation

Mr. Brady said that labor had made magnificent progress in the past twenty years and the progress in the future would be still greater. The world today was with labor. Food, clothing and shelter should be assured. He urged organization as a means of attaining their end.

It being nearly midnight The Daily News representative then left. The speeches were interspersed with songs by Jock McLean, James Black and A. Clapperton, selections by an orchestra consisting of Mrs. Black, D. Eastman and Mr. Hanson, and community singing led by Ald.
