

NORTHWEST EARLY DAYS

Memories of Barracks Days, Recalled by Lady Steele

MONTREAL, Quebec, Oct. 1:— (By the Canadian Press)—Memories ranging from incidents of life around the barracks of the Northwest Mounted Police at MacLeod, Alta., to the aftermath of the South African war when she was in Pretoria, with her husband, Brig.-Gen. Sir Samuel Steele, of Mounted Police fame, and who commanded the Strathcona Horse in South Africa, were recalled by Lady Steele in an interview here.

Lady Steele was married to the then Major Steele in 1890, having met him while on a visit to an aunt at MacLeod, Mrs. Macdonnell, wife of Inspector A. R. Macdonnell of the Mounted Police, who persuaded Sitting Bull to betake himself across the border and stay there by offering to ration him with bullets.

Indian chiefs "dropping in" for a cup of tea at the back door were frequent occurrences, Lady Steele recalled. She told of Calf Shirt, a frolicsome Indian with a penchant for carrying around rattlesnakes inside his shirt, who used to call on Mrs. Macdonnell for the occasional cup of tea. One day, on answering his knock at the back door, Mrs. Macdonnell was met by the fearsome spectacle of Calf Shirt's pets, several rattlers, sitting up around their owner, just by way of a little joke.

"Calf shirt," she said severely, "you've got to put your nasty snakes away or you'll get no tea!"

High Winds
MacLeod was notable for high winds that blew for days on end, and Lady Steele recalled the ludicrous spectacle of the barracks square with chickens digging themselves in and holding on for dear life, sometimes for as long as three days, to keep themselves from being swept away. An unwary passer-by was quite likely to have a terrified fowl blown into his face.

Many celebrated Indian chiefs were among those who had a partiality for tea, among them Red Crow, chief of the Black Feet. He with two others, was brought, to Montreal for a visit after the rebellion, in which they aided the white men, by the celebrated missionary Father Lacombe, to whom a memorial was recently erected at St. Albert, near Edmonton.

MacLeod was the largest Mounted Police station, set among Indian reserves and close to the boundary for its protection. The "Mounties" had to be in a constant state of readiness to turn out at a moment's notice. So high was their state of organization that an entire division could move within half an hour of a summons, ready to be away on duty for a month or more.

Eighty-Mile Drive
An incident mentioned by Lady Steele concerned a drive of eighty miles undertaken by some of the force to fetch a physician, her own brother, Dr. Harwood, to attend one of her small daughters, who was taken ill.

There were many jolly times in the life of the Mounted Police. The men had a quadrille club, and dances were attended by officers and their wives and the families of ranchers who would make as much as a day's journey for festivities at MacLeod. Among the local people was the original of "The Virginian," in Owen Wister's novel of that name. An event described in the book, the mixing of the babies, actually happened in MacLeod, Lady Steele said. Concerts mustered notable talent, and among those who attended them were Father Lacombe, Sir Frederick Haultain, Dr. (later senator), de Veber, and Judge Charles Wood.

Western hospitality being renowned, there were occasionally guests who stretched it to the limit, Lady Steele recalled laughingly. There was one man who stayed for two months, until his host was obliged to ask him to leave, as he was setting out on an inspection tour and it was against rules for a stranger to stay in the barracks. There was another, who was given shelter on a night of a blizzard, and this one stayed six months, although the storm quieted down in rather less time.

Wild West Shows
Wild west shows were the real thing then, with thrilling exhibitions of trick riding by the cowboys and Indians.

Many events in her husband's career that are recorded in the history of the "force" were recalled by Lady Steele. His work in South

It's great to be a low-brow. You can hold your knife and fork any way you wish and if you want a second grapefruit you can ask for it.

It's a curious fact that you'd hardly believe it but pretty nearly fifty per cent of the married people in this city are women.

A patron of art took a friend over his beautifully appointed house, adorned with many fine pictures and statues.

From the dining-room they proceeded to the kitchen, where there was a dado of oak artistically carved. But the guest had no eyes for this. He was staring at a far off corner of the room.

"That is a very fine statue over there," he said, "but why put it immediately beneath the kitchen sink?"

"Sh!" whispered the host. "That isn't a statue; it's a plumber."

Africa and the tribes of the Boeres, former enemies won over to friendship, his organizing of the South African constabulary under Lord Baden-Powell, are also matters in the history of another British dominion.

Lady Steele is a charter member of the Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire. Before her marriage, she was Miss Marie Elizabeth Harwood, daughter of Robert W. Harwood, co-seigneur of Vaudreuil, where she was born. Her family, the De Lotbiniere Harwoods, trace their descent to Alain Chartier de Lotbiniere, French poet, who negotiated the marriage of Margaret of Scotland with the dauphin, later Louis XI.
