

A Tiresome Cough Was Left By A Severe Cold

Mrs. Chas. Eldershaw, Morrell, P.E.I., writes:—"Some time ago I was seized with a severe cold that left me with a bad, tiresome cough. After trying different cough medicines, to no avail, my husband brought me home a bottle of which I started to take at once, and before I had taken several doses I noticed a change, and when I had finished the bottle my cough was completely gone."

Price, 35c. a bottle; large family size 60c.; at all druggists and dealers; manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

MANY AT FUNERAL OF EVERSLEY GLASS

TERRACE, Dec. 6.—There was an unusually large gathering at the funeral of Eversley Glass which took place on Tuesday. Service was held in the United Church, conducted by the Rev. H. T. Allen. The Rev. Canon Marsh and the Rev. A. W. Robinson spoke feelingly of the loss sustained by the unexpected death of a young man of so exceptional a character. The burial took place in the Kalum cemetery. Rev. H. T. Allen reading the burial rites. The pallbearers were companions of the deceased and floral tributes were sent in large display. Business in the town was suspended for the funeral.

INSTALLMENT XXVIII.

Nevertheless, later in the evening, when it became evident that Frankland was hastening over his dinner in order to join them, Miss Brown ventured upon speech. "I don't see why we encourage those two men," she remarked, as the two girls loitered over their coffee. "I don't dislike Mr. Greatson. He seems very intelligent. Your friend Mr. Frankland I am beginning to detest."

"I don't quite know what the attraction is myself," she confessed, "and yet I suppose I do. I am in what the modern novelists call a reactionary state. I like playing with fire even though it isn't fire."

Miss Brown's face duly expressed her disapproval.

"Nothing that you could say, Frances, would make me believe that Mr. Frankland could possibly be 'fire' to you."

"Precisely, my dear, but don't you see that I am obviously 'fire' to Mr. Frankland. It is a poor sort of one-sided emotion," Frances continued, tapping a fresh cigarette on the table, "but there it is, you see. It yields me a faint amusement to read what the man has in his mind when he invites me to various expeditions. He thinks he is so clever, and he is keeps on edging her chair a little further away."

Frances laughed softly. "I'm just the same as I've always been, Mr. Frankland," she assured him, "only sometimes you don't understand me."

"Come and dance then," he invited sulkily.

She laid down her cigarette and rose.

"I can't resist so gracious and pressing an invitation," she murmured.

Eric Greatson reached across the table for his hitherto untasted glass of brandy and drew his chair nearer to his companion's.

"Miss Brown," he said, "you ask me on to talk, but you say very little yourself. Yet in a way you are a very mysterious person. I should like to know more about you and your life."

"Why?"

"Is that coquetry, or do you really wish to know why I am interested?"

"I really wish to know."

"May I tell you this then?" he begged, and Miss Brown, watching his sensitive face, realized that there was no doubt about his sincerity. "It isn't because you are—shall I say the executor—of the great enemy of our cause. It isn't for anything to do with that. My interest is in you personally."

"Are you married like Mr. Frankland?"

"I am not," was the emphatic reply, "and while we are upon the subject I should like to say that Frankland's moral standards are not mine."

"I am glad to hear that," Miss Brown confessed. "You imply that I am very secretive. I will give you a proof to the contrary. I will take you into my confidence. I don't like Mr. Frankland, and I wish that Frances would not encourage him. I know that she only does it because she finds some foolish sort of amusement in it, but at the same time I think that it is unworthy of her. Mr. Frankland is not a nice man."

Greatson shrugged his shoulders.

"Don't think I'm a snob," he begged, "intellectually or otherwise, if I point out that Mr. Frankland has had no opportunity of understanding in the least what women of Miss Austin's stamp are like or how they should be treated. He was down in the mines at 12 years old, his father was a drunkard and his mother worse. He has picked up an immense store of general knowledge by sheer force of will and industry. He has developed the knack of seeing certain vital matters clearly enough from one point of view—his own—and speaking of them fluently, but as regards the more gracious side of life, he has never seen it, and if he had he would not be able to appreciate it. A woman means only one thing to him. The greatest height to which he rises is that he has fancies. Sometimes he fancies one woman more than another. That is just as far as he reaches."

"Then don't you consider," Miss Brown demanded, "that it is unpardonable impertinence on his part to dare to make the suggestions he does to a girl like Miss Austin?"

"It isn't exactly impertinence," he argued, "it's sheer lack of comprehension, as I told you before. All women are the same to Frankland, except that he fancies one more than another. He thinks that he is only offering your friend what any man has a right to offer any woman. And as his experience has been gained in a different circle of life he doesn't, I suppose, understand failure."

"I think," Miss Brown pronounced, "that he's a most abominable person. I believe that Frances has made up her mind not to encourage him any more. I am thankful for it."

doubt be seized upon as a motive for inaction, not only in the matter of a line northerly from the Canadian National, but also for any proposed extension of existing lines.

"Sir Henry Thornton has recently stated publicly that the C.N.R. can haul freight cheaper to Prince Rupert than to any other Pacific port. In that statement there is sound argument given the people of this country for a demand that the people's port be further developed and fully utilized. In that statement and in work quietly being carried out there is the promise that this line will see increased traffic at an early date. It is quite probable that expansion will take place next summer. By that new business Prince George would benefit largely; the greater the business so will their benefits be greater, and it is difficult to see where they can figure their best interests rest in a policy formulated in Vancouver to divert that business from the district in which Prince George has so much to gain."

Three games of last night's Billiard League fixture between the Canadian Legion and Grotto were played and, as a result, the veterans, having won all three, are leading by 750 to 675. The individual scores of these games were as follows:

M. Andrews (Canadian Legion), 250; George Waugh (Grotto), 232. J. W. Scott, 250; W. J. Nelson, 219. G. P. Tinker, 250; J. Andrews, 224. Tinker ran a high break of 50 and Waugh, 46.

The remaining two games are to be played tonight:

A. Murray (Canadian Legion) vs. Don Brown (Grotto).

M. E. Young vs. J. Hillman.

In another of Tuesday night's delayed games, J. W. Scott (Canadian Legion) beat W. E. Willis (Elks) by a score of 250 to 226, bringing this tournament, with one game between A. Murray and A. A. Eason yet to be played, to 968 to 838 in favor of the Elks.

Anaemia Weakness of the Blood

Pallor of the lips, gums, eyelids is proof that the blood is thin and watery. Anaemia is the name given to this condition.

Anaemia is most prevalent among girls and young women. The school girl often suffers as the result of an anaemic condition of the blood as the consequent upsetting of the nervous system.

The remarkable success of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food in cases of this kind is perhaps the best proof that it goes directly to the formation of pure, rich blood. And pure blood is the foundation of the health and strength of the whole human body.
