MORAL INSTRUCTION

If the educational law of this province is to be observed quarters of which are in the city at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. then the "highest principles of morality" are to be taught in the schools. In other words, it is stipulated in an em- ciation are: phatic way that moral instruction, and in its highest form is a part of the educational training of the young in Bri-fenders, and the modes of proce-home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Westberg of South Bank. stands sponsor for this law; it does not, however, stand forced; sponsor for its enforcement, since the Bible, wherein are contained the highest moral teachings, is not permitted in the schools.

It is not only in this province but in various countries of the world that the belief is growing that something more must be done than has been done to guide children in the essentials of conduct and character. In Soviet Russia, where the process of secularizing education has gone farther than anywhere else, the conditions it has brought in its wake are deplorable. In the United States the increase in "crime waves," due as one writer says to "dis- as may have given evidence solving ethics," is arousing grave anxiety. In that coun- reformation. try, too, the silly jargon spread broadcast about "complexes" has had an evil influence. There are those nowadays who believe than where their criminal actions are concerned the fault is not in themselves but in their mental twists. This doctrine is spread as a part of education no matter how erroneous it may prove.

What State education in most countries has yet to learn enile Agencies. is the need for character development, which implies, as nothing else can, the moral sanction of behavior. In other words, where education is to thrive and produce the best type of citizens there the "highest principles of morality" must be taught.
