Sandspit, Prince Rupert's Coming Summer Resort

Special Correspondent of the Daily News spends Vacation there and tells of its Attractions.

At present you go to Sandspit almost any old time, returning precisely the same hour. As the boat schedule is now arranged the visitor may stay either twenty-four hours or two weeks, unless he has friends there or the opportunity of making boarding arrangements, he will be obliged reluctantly to pass the spit and deposit himself nine miles further on up the inlet at "Charlotte" where there is a hotel. At present no such accommodation exists at Sandspit. In spite of the difficulties, however, this place might become at any time an important factor in making the people of Rupert contented with their lot. With such an object in view it is useless to waste time in apologizing for pointing out the reasons.

Sandspit as it is today warm in the sun ninety miles south of here is a point tapering from nothing to three or four miles across and consisting of about a thousand acres, of which a good proportion is land cleared, not painfully by man but easily by nature, who took, just at this spot, one of her infrequent whims to save human beings trouble. Man has cut a few holdings too and his apotheosis in the shape of Government, has run a good road along the three or four miles between the forest and the beach the length of the settlement, with here and there a cut through to farms on the other side.

Rare Loveliness.

The spit is the handle of a beautiful sickle-shaped little bay from the shore of which one looks up "the Inlet" at a view of rare loveliness, even on a coast of lovely views. But the practical thing is the shore itself, three or four miles of wide stretches of splendid sand with ideal bathing; all along. For the last fortnight at all events the writer can testify that the water was of a delightful temperature. The beach is strewn with whitened logs and multitudes of shells—sea spoils of winter storms. A more fascinating holiday ground for children could not be imagined.

Along the southeast shore of the spit where the land is constantly being reclaimed from the sea and covers itself in two years with grass, lies a potential golf course that would have few equals in the world. As level as St. Andrew's with here and there a sand bunker, here and there one made of a tossed up heap of giant trunks that have voyaged, perhaps from California, the fairway to eighteen good holes lies open under the sun. It is almost possible to hear the language of the future looking for lost balls.

Wide Stretches.

This openness on these wide stretches where the light foam or the mosses give deliciously under one's foot, forms the great attraction to the people of a place like Rupert, where we live a little like the denizens of a moated castle longing for the time to come that will bring us greater freedom of movement. But the climate of Sandspit is also exactly what Rupert needs in complement to its own. Bright, soft, sunny days succeed one another all the summer months. It is never hot, but the warm scent of the sea air blowing over the white clover and the honeysuckle in the rancher's garden, is a thing to remember.

Plenty of Supplies.

No doubt there are other spots where sandy beaches are to be found among the islands along the coast, but they have not usually the amenities of settlement. Sandspit is divided among seven or eight families of ranchers from whom butter, milk, eggs, cream, vegetables and berries, as well as mutton and beef can be had in constant supply. Several of the settlers have gasoline boats which could, no doubt, be hired. There are shops at Charlotte and a wireless station from which the inhabitants chiefly learn at present when not to expect the boat. But these things will improve. For the moment the crying need of Sandspit is a wharf. Ottawa built one and it blew away. There is a tale that the nice boy from college that was given the job disregarded local advice about prevailing winds, but these things are often exaggerated. At all events the wharf has been gone some time and it is obviously difficult to take off freight in a small launch in all weathers or to keep fresh killed meat waiting on the beach without protection for a boat that doesn't come in until tomorrow at midnight.

Sandspit has petitioned for another wharf and is quite likely to have the opportunity of doing it again, so blind has Ottawa grown to documents of that kind from northern B. C. In case it does, Prince Rupert might do a wise as well as a friendly act in adding the weight of a few signatures. It is certainly to the interest of this city that a place of such beauty, convenience and charm should be made as accessible as possible, if for the sake of the children alone. Sandspit blooms with children and none of them are ever ill. Noticing the absence of a long felt want, I asked what one did if one wanted to be buried. Sandspit had not thought about it.

It takes eight hours to get there and the fare is eight dollars and ten cents each way, including meals and berth. Campers would be welcome while Sandspit waits for the little summer cottages and the big summer hotel which are bound to come.

Bitter or Better Baking

A letter makes a great difference in a word. A word makes a great difference in baking powders.

If the little word "alum" appears on the label it may mean bitter baking.

If the words "Dr. Price's" stand out bold and strong, they surely mean BETTER baking.

This is only one reason why it pays to use
