NEED OF AIRPLANE SERVICE SHOWN IN RUPERT

Nome to New York Flyers Landed in Dark, Edmonton

Sheer Luck, Combined With Skill, Prevented Accident When Aviators Mistook Flare Signals and Missed Runway

EDMONTON, May 1.—Gliding through pitch darkness to a strange field, Parker Cramer and W. S. Gamble, the Nome to New York flyers, landed safely at the aer-drome here at 10 o'clock last night from Prince George. PARIS TAKES Flares had been set out to mark the runways, but these were misunderstood by the aviators and indicating obstacles. Sheer luck, coupled with flying skill, alone saved the flyers from disaster. They landed off the regular runways, but managed to bring their plane safely to the hangar.

The flyers reached Prince George at 3:35 yesterday afternoon from Atlin and an hour later continued their journey here. South from Atlin they followed the govern- sembled at strategic points and ment telegraphs route practically all the way to Hazelton.

Applications for Airplane Services Made in the City; Alaska Plane Booked Up

That there is need for an airplane service from Prince Rupert is pretty clearly indicated. Yesterday Paul Armour, manager of the Pacific Salvage Co. had an application from three outside people for airplane passage to Seattle. He wired to Juneau for the Alaska-Washington Airways plane southbound from there to call for them and received a reply that the plane was fully booked for its southbound flight Fri-

Mr. Armour says he has also received a request for a plane to go to Stewart this month, and this application it has been necessary to turn down.

Prince Rupert is larger than any of the Alaska cities and the Portland Canal mines are more important than any now operating in southeastern Alaska, yet there is no airplane service. It seems as if there ought to be plenty of business if the service was once established.
