CANADA AIR

Canadian Aviators, Though Few, Demonstrating Superiority to World

Canadian Press)—'Four Mus-tereers of the Air" is the title accorded a small group of Canadian aviators who are rapidly demonstrating to the world that while Canada's air force may not be the largest, it is very nearly, if not the best at its own particular game.

The musketeers are Squadron Leader C. McEwan, M.C., Flight The latest name for the little Lieut. David A. Harding, famous back closet is breakfast room. rugby player, Pilot Officer E. Mc-Nab, and Pilot Officer E. A. Mc- Jake said the other day he heard Gowan, all four being stationed at of an invention which told if a Camp Borden, and flying the Ca- man was lying. At various exhibitions, both here and in the United States, the muswith their antics. At Cleveland, even beat some of the kind noticder from many perhaps more fa- Rupert. mous flyers who had performed there, and their performance was regarded as one of the most remarkable ever seen in the United States.

Camp Borden features individual stunting as the finishing part of a novice flyer's education. It is means of obtaining perfection in the control of an aeroplane, and while formation flying is also taught and practiced the individual practice of putting an aeroplane through its paces is more strongly endorsed.

One of the musketeers' favorite stunts is a very spectacular one. The planes, starting in formation at around 3000 feet, suddenly nose down. At terrific speed, with motors wide open, they spread out, fan-shaped, and suddenly zoom up. At the peak of the climb, with the gradually fall over backwards, and by the non-flyers: "What happens when the engine stops?" the musketeers have a ready answer. It is "Nothing." They are specialists in landing with the motors cut out entirely, or "dead-stick." They keep the plane on a gliding angle which brings it safely to earth, even though the motor has been stopped for some time. The secret, the four say, lies in having sufficient altitude to make a long glide possible.

Before each exhibition the flyers discuss the day's plans. Just when and where to turn, how high to do. where to meet and all the thousand and one other little details incident to events of this kind are threshed over. Then, when the time Siskins, adjust goggles and helmets, looser.' strap on parachutes, and climb into their planes.

and it isn't until the four silvery little planes are twisting and cavorting in the sky that it becomes realized that behind the seeming carelessness lies hours and hours of training.

Technically, the performances given by the musketeers are marvels of accurate and careful fly-ing. Their schedule, as tacked up P. O. BOX 120 in each of the four cockpits prior to the stunts, is as follows:

"Dive from 300 feet; climb to 3000 feet; spit from open formation; loop in line; roll at 45 degrees; follow the leader; close dive, fan out; individual stunting, 10 minutes; reform, close dive and return.' "That's all there is to it." say the musketeers. The technical side of it can be read, and may not mean much to the average person who is not a flyer. But once seen the schedule above is something that will not be forgotten.

Squadron Leader McEwen is a war-time pilot, and is credited with having destroyed more than thirty enemy aircraft.
