ENLARGING MARKETS

The business people of the United States are foolish to erect a tariff wall against Canada, because Canada has been the best market for that country and may continue to be so if not discriminated against. If the people of the States overplay their hand they will cut off this market altogether and thus lose ten million good customers.

Canada, being a very large producing country, has money with which to buy goods. She is better off per thousand of population than is the United States. Gradually, however, the country has been forced to adopt a policy of self-protection, owing to the foolish attitude of the people to the south. Should the present U. S. administration continue in its attitude and carry discriminatory tariffs farther, there will have to be reprisals.

Canada has been cultivating other markets and will continue to do so until eventually trade with United States is reduced to a minimum. Also, Canada will have to refuse absolutely to allow any raw material to leave the country. We cannot sit back and allow discrimination. How all this will end seems difficult to forecast. With United States as our nearest neighbor and with literature from that country permeating this, the natural thing would have been to establish the very closest trade relations, but that seems impossible. There is no stability in the present situation.

"WHY IS THE BACON SO TOUGH?"

(Montreal Journal)

"Why is the bacon so tough?" asked a customer in the Savoy Hotel in London. He thought he was addressing the waiter, but the man to whom he put the question was the conductor of the institution's jazz band. The musician replied: "I'll see directly, sir!" He went back to his companions, the drummer, the saxophonist and the others and the whole gang searched through their repertoire for a piece with the title "Why Is the Bacon So Tough?" They didn't find it, of course, for the simple reason that it didn't exist then. But it exists now, all right. Somehow the incident was bruited about and every jazz composer in London's Tin-Pan-Alley got busy at once getting up a piece of on the bacon theme. Seven different kinds of versions of "Why Is the Bacon So Tough?" are to be had in London music shops, and some of the tunes are taking the country by storm like "Yes, We Have No Bananas" once did. But every one of the jazz pieces leaves the fundamental question up in the air: "Why, after all, is the bacon so tough?"

PUSH HALIBUT SALE PROPOSED

(Ketchikan Chronicle)

Speaking before the Rotary club yesterday noon, Captain Angelsen, one of the halibut vessel owners and successful business man, told of his experiences in the south where he ran into places where halibut was an unknown quantity. He said that he was impressed with the fact that a little judicial advertising would make the demand greater for the product, with resultant good prices to the producers.

Nothing could be more timely than such a suggestion. Likewise there is nothing more true. Two of the finest species of fish in the world are the halibut and the salmon. Neither one of them is advertised to any degree, and consequently there is not the demand that could be created. Other fish of inferior quality, the tuna fish as an illustration, has been widely advertised and is in steady demand in the larger centres of population.

The American Medical Association has said that canned salmon is a prophylactic for goitre. Several years ago physicians decreed that beef liver was a remedy for anaemia. Immediately the packers of meat began advertising the fact. Physicians started prescribing it. The result has been that liver now sells for twice what it used to bring and more. Let the fish producers advertise that their salt water product, with its iodine content, is a prophylactic for goitre and the demand will increase tremendously.

Of course the medicinal qualities are not the only considerations. The food products are among the best in the world and with proper advertising should be in ready demand everywhere. To advertise a worthy product is good business. To advertise an unworthy product is bad business. Salmon and halibut are good products.

GLOOMY DEAN IS ANSWERED

Number of Representative Clergy Take Exception to Statement of Dean Inge

LONDON, Feb. 1.—When Dean Inge, known here as the "Gloomy Dean," criticized rather brutally the United States and that criticism was resented by the United States Senate, a number of British clergy signed a statement saying that no considerable number of Englishmen agreed with the Dean. The statement signed by them follows:

"We, the undersigned, have read the statement that Senator Arthur R. Robinson, of Indiana, quoted a passage from the book entitled 'England,' by the Dean of St. Paul's—the much cited passage which runs as follows:

"If the British flag were hauled down on the North American continent it is more than possible that the nations of Europe, enraged by the bloated prosperity and airs of superiority of 'the man who won the war,' would combine to draw Shylock's teeth; and Great Britain, after losing Canada, would no longer have any motive to help a nation which, in the circumstances supposed, would have finally forfeited its friendship."

"Senator Robinson asserted that the Dean's remarks correctly interpreted the feelings of the great mass of English people. We wish to state that the passage quoted does not represent the views of any considerable number of Englishmen."

The statement is signed by the Anglican Bishops of Blackburn, Bradford, Coventry, Durham, Exeter, Guildford, Hereford, Peterborough, St. Albans, Wakefield, Leicester, Leichfield and Lincoln, the Catholic Archbishop of Liverpool, A. R. Daggard, president of the Baptist Union; W. F. Loft-house, president-designate of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference; Sir Henry Lunn, editor of "The Review of Churches;" the Rev. J. Harry Miller, moderator of the United Free Church; the Bishop of Erehin, and Bertram Smith and Francis Wrigley, joint chairmen of the Congregational Union.
