Blackwood on Bridge

By Easley Blackwood

On the hand just before this one, Mr. Dale made one no trump by means of a little luck and a good unblocking play. He was in there pushing on this hand to finish out the game. It took another unblocking play plus an error by Mr. Abel to bring home his contract.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	Pass	1 S
Pass	2 S	All pass

Safe and sane Mr. Meek started off by quickly taking three heart tricks. If he had shifted to a diamond at trick four, Mr. Dale wouldn't have had a chance. But Mr. Meek couldn't bring himself to lead away from either of his minor suit queens. He made what he considered his safest lead, a trump.

Mr. Dale won in his own hand with the ten of spades. He could see five trump tricks and two side aces. But where was his eighth trick coming from? Clearly some kind of monkey-business had to be attempted—and one of the opponents had to make a mistake.

MR. DALE TRUMPS

So Mr. Dale took two more rounds of trumps ending in dummy. Then he led the deuce of clubs and Mr. Abel was on a spot. He figured if the queen and one club were on his left he had better go in with his king or he wouldn't get a club trick at all.

A little more figuring would have told him that if Mr. Dale had the queen doubleton in clubs plus the ace of diamonds (which he had to have for his opening bid) then there was no way to beat the hand.

But Mr. Abel didn't think that far. He played the king of clubs. And Mr. Dale played the jack—unblocking for a finesse. Mr. Abel returned the ace of hearts and Mr. Dale ruffed.

Now he led the four of clubs, finessing dummy's ten when Mr. Meek played low. Then he cashed the ace of clubs—and the ace of diamonds made the eighth trick. Mr. Dale had made a game on two of the skinniest hands he had played in a long time.

Berlin Cabbies Have Hard Times

By RENE CAPPON

BERLIN (AP)—Asking a German cab driver about his business is like waving a red flag in front of a bull.

"What business?" snorted one cabbie. "On good days I may make seven marks ($1.66) for myself. My rent is due tomorrow and I have only half of it ready. I don't smoke, don't drink, and barely eat."

Another veteran driver said he made more on tips before the war than on his regular earnings (25 per cent of the meter reading) now. He proposed a special Marshall Plan for taximen.

Despite such circumstances, more than 700 cabs are rolling around West Berlin. Nine-tenths of them are ancient and slow. The speedier ones bounce and pitch like destroyers on a rough sea.

The machines—held together by grit, thread and a prayer—are generally owned by small companies with two or three cabs apiece. Operating costs since the war soared between 200 and 300 per cent, the owners say, while rates have gone up only 35 per cent.

Spare parts are difficult to come by. A brand new cab is an extreme rarity, six years after the war.

Some cabbies are handicapped also by the small size of their cars which hold only three persons in dubious comfort.

By contrast, you also see huge, box-shaped antiques which could swallow 10 people—though they'd probably crumble to dust if it were tried.

WOOD-BURNING CARS

At that Berlin taximen are better off than their brethern in the Russian-occupied territories.

In Dessau, until quite recently at least, they had wood-burning cabs, chugging along disconsolately with a chimney for an exhaust and trailing smoke and occasional flame.

At Leipzig, the cabs are if possible still more dilapidated than in the West. Polished and well-fed with gasoline for the Leipzig Fair, they gave an impression of brisk business until you listened to the driver. When the semi-annal fair is over, gas rations return to normal, meaning little or none. There's a black market, of course, but prices are almost prohibitive.

Anyhow, "Who in this town has the money to ride cabs?" a Leipzig cabbie demanded. "I wouldn't ride in this egg-beater myself if I didn't have to. Don't repeat this here—it might be considered anti-state propaganda."

A West Berlin taxi driver pointed up this dismal estate of his clan like this:

"I'd do better collecting unemployment insurance, which isn't exactly luxurious. But I guess I prefer to drive around and pretend I'm making a living."
