The Traffic Cop

City police point out that extra care should be taken in night driving now that long hours of twilight exist, because evenings are often hazy and a detriment to sight. It would be better to use lights sooner than thought necessary, just to make sure.

Night driving, as a whole, should be taken seriously. According to the motor vehicle driver's manual, issued by the B.C. government, the number of fatalities per motor vehicle accident taking place during night driving is more than twice the number than during daylight driving accidents.

One of the main reasons for this is: "Driving at a speed at which the motor vehicle cannot be stopped within the range of vision of the driver—in other words, over-driving your vision."

Second main reason—the blinding glare of headlights of other cars.

Motorists are asked to pay special attention to dimming their headlights. Under a sudden blaze of light the pupil of the eye immediately contracts but, as soon as the bright light has passed the pupil does not immediately expand which causes momentary blindness. During this "blinding," the faster a driver is travelling, the more distance he will cover in that state and if there is a pedestrian or other object immediately ahead of him it is probable he will not see them until too late to be able to avoid them.

For that reason it is important that motorists should use their "dim" button when approaching other cars at night, as well as pedestrians walking on the highway, for they, too, may become blinded momentarily and stagger into the path of the vehicle.

New CNR Box Cars in Use

MONTREAL—The first of 5000 new box cars went into Canadian National Railways service today and it is expected that 1,200 of the new cars will be added to the CNR freight fleet by the end of this month. The balance of 3,800 cars are to be delivered by August.

The cars are being produced by the Canadian Car & Foundry Co., the National Steel Car Corporation and the Eastern Car Company, and will roll off the assembly lines at the rate of 60 to 70 per day until the orders have been filled. Delivery of the new units will increase the number of CNR box cars to more than 80,000.

Story of Kitimat

Origin of Native Reserve Which Is to Become Great Industrial Site

Kitimat, the centre of much interest today as it is the site of a huge proposed aluminum plant, became an Indian village some 250 years ago and was founded because of a murder. The legend was told by Frank Anfield, superintendent of Indian affairs, at the Rotary luncheon yesterday.

Surrounded completely by people of the Tsimpsian band, the Kitimat populace of 576 stands alone as a separate group, with a different heritage and a different language. They are the Haisheles and had their origin somewhere near Rivers Inlet.

About 300 years ago, Mr. Anfield related, several hundred miles south of Kitimat, stood a large village of 3600. The chief of the village murdered his wife, then fled to Schooner Passage where he married again and raised a family. But he learned his first wife's family were after his scalp so he packed up his canoe and fled again up the north coast, finally landing at Mud Bay, in Kildaia Arm, deep inside Douglas Channel.

Once again the refugees were able to live in safety and pursue a normal routine. In his search for adequate hunting grounds, the chief one day paddled further up the channel and stayed the night not far from the mouth of Kitimat River. In the morning, as the sun rose, he was terrified at the site he held, for before him the head of the valley gaped and undulated like the jaws of a huge whale. He had not the stamina to remain in the terrifying presence of this imminent danger and he returned with haste to his family.

VALLEY OF ABUNDANCE

Upon learning from the chief what he had seen, his wife made fun of him and bade him return to the scene. This he did cautiously, but what had seemed to him like the jaws of a gaping whale before turned out to be nothing but millions of seagulls rising and falling as they fed on countless oolichans left on the beaches by a receding tide.

Impressed with this abundance of food he decided this would be his new home. Another phenomenon was the lack of trees or any other growth except moss around the mouth of the river and throughout the entire valley stretching miles before him. So he called it Klak-lilisha, or the level valley, and here he and his family re-settled.

The little group lived peacefully, alone and at the source of abundant food but they were not to be alone for long. One day after examining some bark which he observed floating down the river, the chief knew there were other people in his vicinity for the bark had been cut by human hands. He proceeded up the valley and it was not long before he found a group of starving, battle-worn Tsimpsians from Kitelas, who had been driven away in a long canoe war.

The stragglers were induced to come to Kitimat and from this

Applewhaite's Plea For Air Field at Prince Rupert

Strong renewal of the case for the establishment of an air field for Prince Rupert was made in House of Commons committee recently by E. T. Applewhaite, MP for Skeena, who presented various reasons why there should be such a facility here, finally winning the assurance of the minister of transport,

Hansard reports Mr. Applewhaite as follows: "I should like to discuss a nucleus the village was founded. The group was nomadically inclined and established various small villages in several locations along the channel, usually in quest of better shelter and food sources. The group grew, however, as more people were attracted to the area because of the abundance of oolichans, more than had ever been seen even in the Naas River, Clans developed, predominantly the Eagles.

In 1885, said Mr. Anfield, the present village of New Kitimat was founded by Dr. G. H. Raley, a missionary, who at 91 is still alive today.

The Kitimat natives hold eight reserves all of them surrounding the legendary sites of their old villages. The reserves were granted them by the government, said Mr. Anfield, in respect for legends held dear to the heart of the Haisheles.

But soon they will lose some of this land. They are giving it willingly, in return for compensation, to those who will make a thriving city take the place of a modest village.

D. S. Love, assistant district engineer, provincial public works department, is sailing tonight on the Coquitlam for a trip to Masset on official duties.

Ottawa Man Speaker Here

Daughters of Empire Hear About Pure Food Laws

Members of Municipal Chapter, Imperial Order, Daughters of the Empire, this week heard about the operation of Canada's pure food laws from R. D. White, chief of the inspection branch, Ottawa, who was guest speaker before the chapter at its monthly meeting in the common lounge of the Civic Centre. After the address, an appropriate picture, "Truth Unadulterated," was shown. Many questions were asked Dr. Whitmore who was especially thanked for his attendance. The regent, Mrs. G. G. Withers, was in the chair.

A letter from Mrs. Pellant of Vancouver, the provincial regent, congratulated the Daughters of the Empire in Prince Rupert for outstanding work during the past year.

Mrs. Withers thanked the chapter for sending her as delegate to the recent annual convention in Victoria and gave an interesting account of the proceedings, mentioning especially a number of new ideas which
