Japanese Girl Golden Singer

By WARREN WHITE

TOKO (Reuters)—A young pocket-size "Jenny Lind" is sweeping Japanese song-lovers off their feet.

She is the "Golden Girl of Song," 13-year-old Hibari Misora, daughter of a Yokohama fishmonger. Praised by the nation's starchy concert critics who formerly ignored her, she is going from height to height, winning the emotions of millions of Japanese song-sentimentalists.

Doctors are unable to give a satisfactory explanation why, even at the age of seven, baby-faced Hibari could walk on to small-town concert platforms and sing in the throbbing trilling mature voice of a Japanese-style "sob-sister."

Now, six years later, with an average artist's lifetime of barnstorming behind her, this "female Sinatra" is in the big money. Japan's biggest entertainment field, the movies, vies with big companies for her contracts.

Hibari, has an astute manager whose duty is to handle both films and recordings. Since she was "discovered" in 1948, she has soared in popularity in the field of photograph entertainment to a point where "Hibari" records are 60 per cent of one company's sales.

And she has made 19 films, including eight last year and seven so far this year.

DECEPTIVE APPEARANCE
Hibari-San, a snub-nosed, black-eyed girl, well under five feet tall and with a long permanent wave, is nothing outstanding to look at.

Nor are the songs she sings anything out of the ordinary.
They are sung in Tokyo night clubs every night and are on the lips of any whistling messenger boy. They range from
"Flower Shades of Love" to
"Muddy Boogie."

It is Hibari-San's particular voice that provides the phenomenal magic. Managers of theatres where she makes 10-day personal appearances for 3,000,000 yen ($3,000), have stated one strong complaint to her bookings.

"Audiences stand up in their seats to cheer," one man said.
"It costs big sums after every show to mend broken seats."

Her immense success has meant little to Hibari-San. She continues school studies whenever she can fit them in. She lives with her fishmonger father and mother in their tiny cottage near the fish shop at Yokohama. But she hopes to build her parents a new house before long.

HUNTERS' FIND

PERTH, Ont. (CP)—Members of the Perth Madawaska Hunt Club not only got their deer quota, but also found a radioisotope on the top of Green Mountain. The instrument for recording atmospheric conditions at high altitude is being returned to the U.S. weather bureau.
