Housewife's Hands Are Being Cured
LONDON — London beauty parlors are doing a good business with new courses designed to cure what they call "Housewife's Hand."

A leading beauty parlor in Bond Street gives expert guidance on how to combat "washing-up dryness" and avoid work-broken nails. "Nearly all women do housework nowadays," says Bridget Rowland, chief assistant at this parlor, "and many women are worried about the effect on their hands."

"Housewife's Hand" is attacked by a cream, instead of soap and water. And cream gradually eases the dirt from cracks in the fingers. Nails are strengthened by the non-use of nail varnish for at least six months and special preparations are used to guard against splitting.

No. 1 priority in the treatment is the use of rubber gloves whenever the hands are placed in water. "I know it needs a lot of will-power," said Miss Rowlands, "but it's the only way to keep hands decent."

Great Fare—Years Ago

BUFFALO, N.Y.—Visualize, if one can, a 300-foot long table heaped to overflowing with ten sheep roasted whole; two 4,000 pound oxen barbecued; 100 turkeys; 300 fowl; a dozen flock of geese; thirty piles of pickles and sausages; twelve barrels of coffee. To this add four loaves of bread, each fifteen feet in diameter. This was the bill of fare placed before guests at the Erie Railway a century ago on the occasion of a first train trip.
