Worst Storm In Century

LONDON (CP)—A dozen battered ships struggled to reach western European ports today as a widespread storm continued to rage on land and sea. The roaring winds swept the coasts and waters for the fourth day running.
Death toll from the storm is believed to be at least 54 with 17 missing.
Floods today added to havoc caused by the 100-mile-an-hour winds which swept Britain over the week-end; leaving at least 12 dead and hundreds of thousands of dollars damage.
Weather experts say it may prove to be the worst storm in a century.

Terrace Road Opened Again

Skeena River Highway, between here and Terrace, which had been closed over the week-end owing to snow, was clear again today and reopened to traffic.
Public Works Department described road conditions as "quite good," although icy in spots, necessitating chains.
