Canada's Water Power

CANADA, industrially, is a child of the electrical age, fed by waterpower. Or, as the current monthly review of the Bank of Nova Scotia comments:

"It would be difficult to name a country to which the rise of hydro-electric power has been of greater economic significance than it has to Canada. . . .

"In the production of electricity from water power, Canada is surpassed only by the United States; and, if steam-generated power is included, possibly also by Russia and Germany. . . .

"Installed capacity at the end of 1950 was 22 per cent greater than at the end of the Second World War and 55 per cent greater than in 1937, and a further addition of some eight per cent is being made this year. At the end of 1951, capacity will total over 13,500,000 horsepower and other large projects already under way should bring the total to about 16,000,000 in the next few years." Yet:

"Only a fraction—perhaps 25 per cent—of Canada's vast hydro-electric potential has so far been developed: it is officially estimated that water-power resources known and evaluated at present would support an installed capacity of 55,000,000 horsepower.

"Many of the large undeveloped sites are, of course, in remote areas from which power cannot be economically transmitted to the places where it is most needed. Thus, some sections, notably southern Ontario, can see the day approaching when, with no new large sites to develop, they must turn to fuel-produced power.

"The large reserves in northern areas seem likely, however, as in the past, to facilitate the development of mineral discoveries. Moreover, high-voltage transmission may in time make many of these northern power resources more accessible.

"The magnitude of the steam plants under construction makes clear why Ontario is urging an immediate start on the St. Lawrence seaway, with or without United States participation in the navigational part of the project. . . .

"All over the country, new hydro-electric facilities are being built in the effort to meet a steadily-rising demand—a demand fed by the needs of new pulp and paper, mining and metallurgical developments; by the great activity in the heavy industries; by the rapidly increasing use of electricity in manufacturing generally; and by a mounting commercial and domestic use of power associated with higher living standards of an expanding population."

Migration is Answer

AN ARTICLE in the New York Times points out that Western Germany with a critical over-population of 4,000,000, Italy with 3,000,000, Austria with 500,000 and Holland with 100,000 are the crux of the problem of staying the advance of Communism. While present conditions obtain, these countries present a fertile field for the expansion of the Communist doctrine.

Against this picture of too many people trying to live on too few economic resources there is another. In North and South America, in Australia and, to a lesser extent, in France, there are resources that are crying out for the workers necessary for their development. What then is the answer? The secretariat of the Council of Europe has estimated that an emigration rate of 600,000 annually over a period of five years would ease the most pressing problems of Europe. It would not increase our own for, instead of being dependent on western aid, these thousands would become productive.

There is little doubt that such action would materially improve the western position in Europe, but it would materially improve our own. Canada has boundless resources. It is now as close as may be to full employment, leaving no overplus of workers for new enterprises that require manpower. We must spread the burden involved over more backs or find ourselves unable to meet these demands without accepting a less generous way of life. The choice is ours and the time is now.

Chiang and Spain

I WAS SITTING in the lounge of a cosy little London hotel, reading the paper, when an American opened up on me. I guess I looked American, for he assumed I was from the U.S.A.

It was at the height of the MacArthur episode and my fellow guest was sad:

"When I get back home," he said, "I'm going to tell everybody that we haven't got a single ally in all the world."

Much to my wife's disgust, I never argue with strangers. I just listened. It seemed he was boiling mad because, over a drink, he had heard a British steel man accept an order from a Canadian for "a thousand and twenty tons of steel per month." Yet that very day the papers told of how Britain was trying to get a bigger allocation of metals from the U.S.A.!

EVERY I BROKE my fixed rule, in the end, and got into a mild argument with the stranger. It was too much to hear him say that they didn't have a "real ally." The London papers right then were full of reports of the ghastly losses suffered by the Gloucester Regiment, which had been badly mauled holding the UN line in Korea.

"Well, if you are going to tell them that you haven't got what you call 'a real ally,' maybe you had better tell them why this is so."

I proceeded to tell him how many Canadians and Britons felt about the U.S. attitude towards Chiang Kai-shek. I am quite sure he did not know the difference between the island of Formosa, which belongs to China, and the country of Korea.

"You practically forced China into the war in Korea, because how did they know that you weren't running interference for Chiang Kai-shek?"

"How did they know MacArthur wasn't driving up to the Manchurian border of China, where he would step aside and let Chiang's troops keep on going?"

I told him how both the British government and the Canadian government clearly foresaw and, alas, too politely warned of the mix-up that might result from the half-right, half-wrong U.S. policies re Korea and Formosa.

He retorted: "Well, then, if that is how the Canadian government felt about it, why did they go into Korea at all?"

My answer was that Canada went in because we have always stood for collective defense against aggression. We had to choose between evils.

WE DO NOT know whether the Red government of China would have interfered in the Korean war in any event.

We do know that the link-up between the United States and Chiang Kai-shek made it much easier for that Red government to get the support of their people for such intervention. For it should have been plain for years back that the peasants of China won't fight for the Chiang Kai-sheks. They got rid of him once, and don't want him via Korea or otherwise.

Likewise in Europe. The common people of Western Europe simply won't fight as an ally of Franco Spain; and the surest way to undermine the whole North Atlantic Pact would be for the U.S.A. to try to bring Franco in through the back door.

LET US NOT make the greatest mistake of this age. Whatever we do, let us keep the close association that has developed amongst the Western democracies. If we take the right road,

The Calgary Albertan will sell for seven cents in Edmonton, two cents more than what it is in Calgary. Distribution costs are greater in the north. The late Frank Oliver accomplished a good deal in his long life but he never hooked seven cents a copy for the Bulletin.

ALL HIGHEST NO. 2

There is one less Hohenzollern on earth today. In his 69th year, the man who was born Crown Prince of Germany passed away Friday. He lived to collect a wonderful assortment of disappointments and surprises. He had ample reason to believe his inheritance was a mighty one. Yet he died after long retirement, long illness, shed of all glitter, pomp and power and too poor to live in one of his numerous uncomfortable castles.

WHY NOT A STROLL?

There are parts of the city where tourists, as well as children and citizens, cannot help but see examples of conduct for which vandalism is too weak a term. Take, for example, the CNR park which, from modest beginnings, is every summer becoming more attractive. Something, however, that seldom occurs is the presence of a police constable, not as a regular routine, but just for its occasional moral effect. There are many persons, local folk as well as strangers, who would welcome the sight of an officer on some secluded path instead of in a passing car.

Joe Walcott says he always reads the Bible before a fight and prays between rounds. This has never been considered a feature of contemporary pugilism but, speaking offhand, it's a useful thing to keep in mind in a world that keeps getting less easy to live in.

No popular song has yet appeared in Korea and, according to the progress of cease-fire negotiations at Kaesong, just how soon is open to question. However, it's as well to remain practical and, with another winter coming up, find something to whistle. "Keep the Home Fires Burning" can take a lot of beating.

A Vancouver resident struck a man in the face and is now up on a charge of manslaughter. Over in the States, another man, wearing gloves, hit a fellow named E. Charles for several minutes. He cleaned up a fortune, as well as a lot of praise. It's all in the way you do these little things.

NEWCASTLE, England (CP).—The first gas turbine in Britain to run on pulverized coal is being tested here. The engine develops 500 horsepower and is more compact and cheaper to run than most power units.

that can develop into a federation which can give peace, law and order, and abundance to all mankind.

Anyone who tries to separate the U.S.A. from the rest of us is no friend of democracy and a direct menace to Canada. But the worst of such people are the GO IT ALONE crowd in the U.S. administration.

Living in the Word of God

REV. H. O. OLSON (St. Paul's Lutheran Church)

"I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life that I know live in the flesh. I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me."

Luther says of Paul he had the same voice, the same tongue, before and after his conversion. Before his conversion his tongue uttered blasphemies. But, after his conversion, his tongue spake a spiritual and heavenly language.

Paul was an ambassador of God's plan of salvation. When he was persecuted he confessed that he was only a messenger. He was sent by God, and was confident in that truth. Have we as individuals, as a congregation, as a church, that confidence in God's Word, that we are ambassadors of the truth? Do our lives in our daily living show forth the radiance of Him who died for us?

Remember what Jesus said unto His disciples in (John 4:35): "I say unto you, lift up your eyes and look unto the fields for they are all white unto harvest." Are we willing to look upon our fellowmen with a spiritual eye, and consider the eternal destiny of their souls? Do we fully realize that men and women who reject the salvation that God offers in Christ Jesus are eternally lost?

Paul lived and preached the truth before all people. He was not ashamed. He loved them with a spiritual love, realizing that, unless they repented and amended their ways, they would be forever lost.

We, too, must remember that we have many people in our country who willingly turn their backs upon God and the church. They are not under the influence of God's Word. The children grow up without any knowledge of God's saving power in Christ. Therefore, their consciences are not sensitive to God, or to right and wrong. They grow up in an environment that is only of this world, and consequently they commit adulteries, murders and thefts, all because they are not conscious of a living God.

We need to be confident in the truth we possess even as Paul. We need to remember that men in times past have given their lives to protect the Word of God that we have today. We must treasure and not be ashamed of this truth. Man is justified by grace through faith alone. There must be repentance and faith in Jesus Christ for the forgiveness of sins. Jesus had a stern message for the unbelieving: "I tell you 'nay,' but except you repent ye shall likewise perish." But for the penitent sinner there is peace and comfort. Jesus states in (Matt. 11:28) "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart and ye shall find rest for your souls."

Paul stood firm, defending the truth like a rock that could not be moved. He was willing to give his life for God's Word. He was concerned about one thing namely to do God's will, that his fellowmen could come to knowledge of the truth and find peace with God. This, of course, gives us a tremendous challenge. Have we given Christ full possession of our hearts so that He has first place in our lives, or are we wilfully practicing disobedience and secret sin? We need to refresh in our minds and hearts that God despises sin but loves the sinner.

May we illustrate by taking, for example, a mother and her child. This child becomes ill with diphtheria, causing much pain and discomfort. Now the mother loves the child but despises the diphtheria germ that causes the child so much pain. So it is with God and sin; God loves us, but the sin that we commit grieves Him.

What is the secret of successful Christian living? What was it that made Paul and Jeremiah and others so strong to labor, so willing to work, so persevering and so unwearied in endeavoring to win their fellowmen into the faith of our Lord Jesus? When we sum it up we realize that they lived in the Word, resting in God's promises, using the means of grace that God had given them. Paul was always feeding by faith on God's Word, Jesus Christ the crucified, risen, and exalted Saviour was the meat and drink for his soul.

We must keep in mind that the death of Christ on the Cross, made the atonement for all our sins. He was victorious over sin, death and the devil. This is the truth with which we begin as we open Genesis. The seed of the woman bruising the serpent's head is nothing else but a prophecy of Christ crucified. This is the truth that shines out, though veiled, all through the law of Moses and the history of the Jews. The daily sacrifice, the paschal lamb, the continual shedding of blood in the tabernacle and the temple—all these were emblems of Christ crucified. This is the truth that we see even in the book of Revelation. "In the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain." Yes, even in the midst of heavenly glory we get a view of Christ crucified.

As we live in the Word, we see Jesus Christ as the crucified, risen, and exalted Saviour. We are therefore admonished to abide in the means of grace that God has given us. We read in (Acts 2:42) "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." These early Christians continued to seek and live in the Word of God. They rejoiced in spiritual fellowship. They observed the Word and thereby they were preserved and strengthened in faith, and hope unto life eternal.

As we daily come to Him, yielding ourselves completely to His Word, we are able by His grace to fulfill the eternal purpose for our lives.
