

Hunting, Trapping, Helpful

HALL'S LANDING, Ont. (C)—Mrs. George McCluskey and her family are beating the cost of living by trapping and hunting. When city life became "too expensive" five years ago, the family moved to this district 20 miles north of Peterborough, and Mrs. McCluskey spends most of the time helping her husband hunt various kinds of animals. Recently she went to Peterborough with 11 racoon pelts, the first results of her hunting, and all bagged within three nights.

Finding a good mark, she discovered, is more difficult than hunting the animals in the first place. She finally sold her first catch in Peterborough at $1 a pelt.

Chance For Early Peace

By DON WHITEHEAD
But American Military Men See Korean War Dragging

WASHINGTON (AP)—American top-ranking military men believe there's an outside chance for an early peace in Korea. But until an armistice is signed they also believe the war may drag on for months and even explode into a fiercer struggle.

The optimism in defence headquarters here is tempered by a cold distrust of the Reds. There still is a cautious attitude among those who must plan for whatever comes out of the truce talks—whether it be peace or more months of bitter fighting.

The hopeful view is based on a strong suspicion that the Communists—despite all their haggling—want an armistice for two major reasons:

1. The Chinese and North Koreans have suffered terrible casualties in the past 17 months along with heavy losses in military equipment and supplies, which have been a drain on Russia.

2. The Reds finally are convinced they never will be able to drive the United Nations forces out of Korea.

On the other side, the thinking goes like this: 1. The talks could bog down for many more weeks over the questions of policing an armistice, exchanging prisoners, or withdrawal of foreign troops from Korea.

2. A breakdown in the talks would probably lead to a naval blockade of the Red coast and Allied bombing of Red bases in Manchuria.

The next few weeks will disclose whether there is any real basis for the optimism. One thing is certain: The Allies today are negotiating from strength. They are in a vastly stronger position than they were at this time last year.

It's no small force that is engaged in Korea. And military leaders are confident the retreats of 1950 will never be repeated.

If there is an armistice—what then? Military leaders warn it would be a grave mistake to accept an armistice as a signal that armed forces will leave Korea soon after.

"We can't pull out of Korea immediately, even with an armistice," an army spokesman said. "We must keep troops there as long as they are needed to guarantee the safety of South Korea. At this stage, we can't say how long that would be."

The pace of any withdrawal likely will depend in part on how far the UN can equip and prepare the South Koreans to defend their republic.

One highly-placed officer sees the possibility that there may never be a formal armistice in Korea.

"It could be," he speculates, "that the war will just

Canada Retail Sales Lower

VICTORIA (C)—Decrease in value of retail sales was recorded in British Columbia during recent months, the Department of Trade and Industry reported Tuesday.

Retail sales during September were valued at $94,000,000 compared with $94,576,000 in September 1950.

Preliminary reports on sales in department stores during October showed a drop of four percent from last October.

"This downward trend in department store sales was common to all provinces in Canada," the department report said.

It is anticipated that an upsurge will occur during the Christmas shopping season.

Christmas Party For CCC Kiddies

A Christmas tree, Santa Claus and presents are planned in a Yuletide party for children of Columbia Cellulose employees by the CCC (300) Club. Final plans were discussed at a Club executive meeting Tuesday night. Roy Evans was appointed committee chairman of arrangements.

Included in the party, to be held December 20 at a place to be announced, will be refreshments for children and a program of entertainment provided by the Club drama and choral groups.

rock filled dam in Canada. Most of the dam will be stripped to the rock, the area in front will not be stripped. The back of the core trench will be stripped to the rock in the area which is to be refilled with quarry rock. There will be a one and a half to one slope in the centre portion, and downstream, a one to one slope. Close by, 57 tons of powder was ready to remove 143,000 cubic yards of rock. Across the river the wagon drills were pointed out to me, working on the drilling and blasting to the bottom of the gorge.

HUGE MACHINERY

Now came a highlight for me, when I was pulled from above, and pushed from below into the cab of an enormous Marion diesel electric, three and a half shovel, which shovels up three and a half cubic yards at a scoop. There, I hung on to the back of Charlie Brodie's seat, half deafened, and racketing around while the teeth of the Marion greedily chawed at the rocky soil, deterring shudderingly only for a moment at bigger rocks than usual. I watched two Euclids filled, and driven away. Then I jumped down, and scrambled into the seat by the side of Alec Daniluk ready to start off to dump the contents of his "Euke" nearby. Full, she rode well, but after I had watched through the back window the contents being shed down a precipice, I felt I was on an old-fashioned "cake walk" at a fair. The steering wheel was enormous, and when I remarked on it, Alec said: "Yes, it is very strange driving a car after this."

I had had the honor of being the first woman visitor to be allowed on the machinery.

After standing on the narrow footbridge, only supposed to carry one person at a time, and again watching the pumps at work, we drove over to No. 1 mechanic shop, where tired machinery can be overhauled, and even the biggest shovels can be brought inside. The excellence of the roads keeps down the repair bill to a minimum. A visit to the warehouse revealed that there were close to a million dollars' worth of spare parts. An excellent filing system ensures that any part required may be found by anyone with the minimum of trouble.

We finished our tour just in time to drive onto the airstrip to where a Mannix De Havilland Beaver piloted by Norman Hartnell was waiting to take off for Prince George. He was going to drop me on the return trip at Vanderhoof. It was a perfect day for flying. How straight some of the roads looked, and yet others as meandering as the proverbial drunken Indian roads.

We looked down on the Forestry station, before only seen when the sun shone on it from below. How tiny the train looked on its toy rails and what innumerable stretches of water, now frozen, there were below us. As we approached Prince George, we could see the smoke from the many saw mills, and how distinctly the crescents in the town stood out.

I knew from experience that game doesn't come down to watch the train go by, but it can't escape the plane, and on the way to Vanderhoof we saw the moose that wasn't visible on

Reviewing the events of the past day, I was convinced that "harmony" should be the passport, not "aluminum," to this village of Nechako, bigger in population than Vanderhoof itself, and knew that to everyone there, the job was the thing, and like everything else there, only the best was good enough, and this applied to the effort too.
